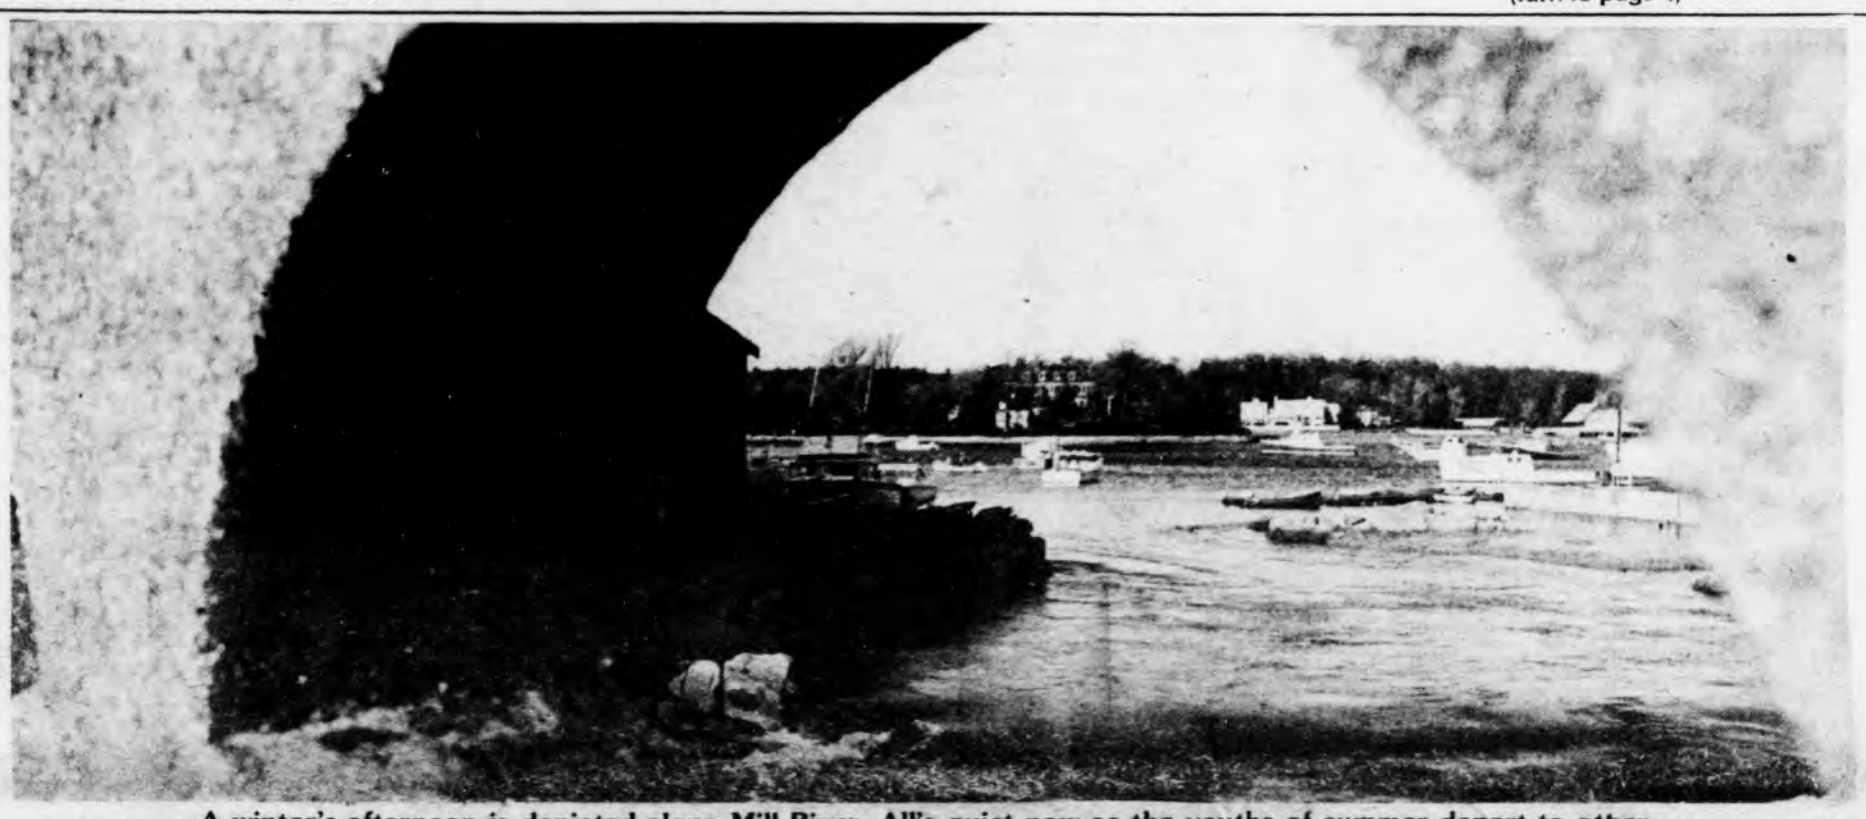
Local nurse departs today for Ethiopia

By Jane Lane

Today, Eileen Mullaney will leave her family and the large, comfortable home on South Main Street.

For one year, she will not recline upon the cushioned pillows of her livingroom sofa; she will not take long, hot showers to waken her from sleep; she will not bask for hours on the shores of Sandy Beach.



Eileen will be spending the next year in the midst of famine, disease and death. She is journeying today to Ethiopia.

It is an honor for Eileen. As a registered nurse, she was one of four to be selected by the Church World Service to work alongside the international Red Cross in one of the most devastating refugee camps in that drought-plagued country.

She will first arrive in the capital city of Addis Ababa. Eileen will then travel to a small corner of Africa called Bati, where about 30,000 starving people await medical assistance.

This is an experience she awaits with hope - that she

Rockland Trust grants leave to indicted officer

Rockland Trust Company gave Donald Winn his requested leave of absence and continued support last week in the light of Winn's indictment on charges of not reporting large cash transactions to the Internal Revenue Service.

It was the federal grand jury that indicted Winn, 47 of Hanover, a vice president of Rockland Trust Company.

Specifically the indictment alleges the transactions involved more than $100,000 in a 12 month period. Added to that the document accuses Winn of making a false statement to the IRS. In all there are 18 counts of felony. Winn faces charges that could bring up to 75 years in prison and $7 million in fines if he were convicted on all counts.

Speaking Friday on behalf of the 77 year old Rockland-based company Alan Peterson, executive vice president and treasurer, repeated the institution's conviction of the innocence of all its employees, including Winn.

"The bank, " said Peterson, "continues to believe none of its employees knowingly has done anything wrong."

"We had no way of knowing what the Grand Jury was working on," he said, "but, yes, it was somewhat of a surprise. The fact that it has taken this length of time to reach this indictment indicates that perhaps this is the end."

To this date criminal charges have been filed against the Rockland Trust Company and Winn, no one else. The company paid a fine of $50,000 in September for failing to file IRS reports on 19 cash transactions, which totaled more then $800,000. The bank conceded a total of 281 violations that come to about $11 million in cash transactions.

The indictment handed to Winn ties the charges of illegal cash transactions to dealings affiliated with a gold, silver and coin dealer.

It is Patrick Walsh, special attorney for the Organized Crime Strike Force of the U.S. Department of Justice who has headed the investigation of the Rockland Trust Company case since May of 1983 when the first subpoenaes were issued.

Walsh would not comment on whether or not there would be more indictments handed down. But he has said the investigation is continuing.

Alan Peterson said Winn requested the leave of absence in order to prepare his defense. That was granted last Thursday and it is, said Peterson, a paid leave, for what the company hopes will be a "speedy resolution."

Peterson, one of the executives of the company, which has 18 branch offices along with its main office in Rockland, said customers of the bank in many instances have taken time to speak to employees or officials in support and endorsement.

"The bank," said Peterson,"is appreciative of the support we've received. This is an unfortunate and difficult situation but it doesn't affect the safety and the services.

Rockland Trust Company employs more than 300 employees.

An update on the issues of 1984

(This is the second part of a two-part update on the more important issues of 1984. Ed.)

The past year was filled with events large and small These are but a few of the issues which occurred in 1984, and a look at how they are shaping up in 1985.

Community cable television

There are now about 1200 subscribers to Cohasset Cablesystems, and that number is increasing every week.

Community cable programming began about six months ago, and now, according to Cable Advisory Committee Chairman David Chittim, "just about every Cohasset event is televised on cable."

Cohasset Cablesystems manager John Ronan has been responsible for supervising the production of the local programs. Thus far, he has trained 160 residents in the production and editing of cable television. About 10 people volunteer their production services and talents at the Stagecoach Way studio, literally day and night, according to Chittim.

School sports and events, selectmen's meetings and other community activities have become routine watching for the cable subscribers in Cohasset.

The high school now has a full-functioning cable studio. Advisor John Packard excitedly predicts the renovated classroom will be utilized by students and residents just about 24 hours a day.

The library, under the direction of Richard Hayes, also has hook-up to cable. For the past year, the library has housed Key Facts, a cable television magazine. This unique feature of cable was given to the Paul Pratt Library free of charge for one year. The library is also interconnected to the schools, allowing cable program access between the two facilities.

"I'm very pleased as the chairman of the cable advisory committee, with the performance this year of Cohasset Cablesystems," Chittim said. "It is an excellent company with a lot of integrity. They have fulfilled the obligations of their contract with selectmen and it has been a good resource for the community." Chittim said he has received nothing but positive responses from residents who currently subscribe to Cohasset cable television.

Planning Board issues

Currently, there is a lull in the business before the planning board. That is a something that has not occurred until the holidays arrived. This year has been one of the busiest ever for the planning board in Cohasset.

Plans to construct Cohasset Plaza shopping center on Route 3A at Sohier Street has had a confusing and lengthy history this past year. Right now, the plans developed by Donald Staszko are in abeyance while the developer and his attorney, Charles Humphreys, appeal a Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) ruling.

The state DEQE decided that Staszko could not begin construction of the project until all local permits

Still searching

It's back to the drawing board for selectmen, as they prepare to advertise for the still-vacant position of executive secretary.

Since Mark Lanza resigned from the job almost four months ago, selectmen have searched for a replacement. Although last month they offered the job to Connecticut resident Gerald Sitko, after initially accepting the position, he later rejected the offer.

Thirty eight applicants had submitted resumes when selectmen first advertised the $25,000 a year position in late Sepetmber. They interviewed eight applicants and narrowed the field down to three. Sitko, an assistant executive secretary in a larger Connecticut community, declined selectmen's offer. The runner-up indicated to selectmen last week he did not want the job. The final candidate, Thomas Younger, executive secretary in Norton, was interviewed at last week's selectmen's meeting, but was not offered the position.

In an attempt to attract more qualified and experienced professionals, selectmen said last week they will ask the advisory committee to increase the salary to $30,000.

Lanza left the job Sept. 6 when he accepted a higher-paying position in Westwood.

Selectmen were in a quandry as to where to advertise the job. They were too late to qualify for the publishing deadline for the Beacon, the newsletter sent to all Massachusetts municipalities. Last week, selectmen said they would attempt to get the ad in past the deadline, while also advertising in The Globe.

Meanwhile, Acting Executive Secretary Janet Chalke said she will continue her duties in that office, but will not apply for the premanent position.

Cracked pipe problem

In a letter addressed to the superintendent of the Water Department, Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis said the town should receive payment for a Stockbridge Street sewer pipe cracked this fall during the water main project.

According to DeSantis, another cracked pipe on Margin Street was probably caused by the water project activity, but the town would be unable to prove liability.

In regard to the Stockbridge Street sewer pipe, DeSantis wrote that the replaced water main gradually settled, causing a "damming effect" on the sewer line. And according to the contract the town negotiated with Geneva Construction, "it shall be the contractor's responsibility to locate all existing utilities and to protect same from damage and harm. . . shall be properly restored, at the expense of the contractor, to the satisfaction of the owner."

Therefore, DeSantis stated, the town should be reimsbursed $750 for the television inspection conducted by Eastern Pipe. The inspection determined the exact location and extent of the pipe's damage.

No building permit

Building Inspector Edward Poskus informed the school committee Dec. 19 that no building permit has been requested or given to the school department for the re-roofing project at the Deer Hill School and high school.

According to Poskus, "our records fail to show that a building permit has been taken out, and I find no request has been made to the Board of Selectmen to waive the cost of the building permit." The building inspector said the contract documents require the contractor to take out all permits required and to pay all fees.

The fee for the high school for the building permit is $1935, based on the contract amount of $387,561, and $635 for the Deer Hill School based on the contract award of $128,000.

SEMASS agreement process

Assistant Town Counsel John Slater informed the president of SEMASS, the trash-to-energy disposal firm, that he will be acting as selectmen's liason in contract negotiations between the two sides.

The town voted at the November special town meeting to enter into a contract with SEMASS for the delivery and acceptance of the town's solid waste.

Slater requested that SEMASS submit a "Waste Acquisition Agreement" for the town's review. He also requested a copy of the contract between SEMASS and Commonwealth Electric Company for the purchase and sale of electricity.

A third request made by Slater to the firm was a copy of the contract between SEMASS and the Carver, Marion, Wareham Regional Refuse Disposal District. Specifically, Slater stated, the Town of Cohasset is "concerned with the status of the provision of landfill space at the Regional Landfill for the Town of Cohasset in a situation in which SEMASS is unable to accept waste."

Clear a Path

Help your letter carrier deliver mail as timely and safely as possible this winter by clearing ice and snow from walkways and steps leading to your mailbox.

Last year, thousands of letter carriers across the nation suffered sprains, fractures or broken bones because they lost their balance on icy and snow-covered driveways, sidewalks, steps and porches.

"We do everything possible to deliver the mail regardless of how bad the weather becomes," Cohasset Postmaster Edward L. Fonseca Jr. said. "I do realize it's not always easy to remove ice and snow, but our carriers are not required to risk personal injury on slippery surfaces to deliver the mail."

Postmaster Fonseca is also asking the cooperation of local road authorities to keep public roadways clear of snow and ice to reduce driving hazards during the winter months.

"With postal customers and road authorities co-operating to reduce walking and driving hazards this winter, they will be protecting not only their letter carriers but their family and the rest of the community as well," he said.

Assessing the risk of suicide

By Lisa J. Messersmith

"Are you feeling so bad about your life right now that you are thinking of killing youself?" The question is asked 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, by Samaritan volunteers who befriend individuals in need of someone to talk to.

Sally Caspar, director of the Samaritans, Merrimack Valley, met with several Marshfield High School students and teachers Dec. 20 to discuss suicide. She began her discussion with an explanation of why she has made suicide prevention her career.

While packing to move to the East from the Midwest Casper received a phone call from a friend who said, "I don't want to go on with my life." She asked Casper not to do anything and Casper complied. Yet Casper stayed on the phone and talked with her friend, let her tell why she wanted to stop living her life. They talked for a long time and the next day Casper moved East. Her friend did not kill herself.

"I think about suicide every day," Casper said, because of this incident. She explained her involvement in suicide prevention. "I felt I needed to know how to respond to a suicide call," she said. "I never wanted to go through those feelings of inadequacy and helplessness again." Luckily, Casper was able to be what her friend needed. "It just took a friend," she said.

Casper talked to the students in order to help them deal with a friend or relative who might be suicidal. "Some of us, sooner or later, will be put on the spot," she said, as she was with her friend.

Casper gave the students some known suicide statistics. Five hundred and twenty-nine officially reported suicides were committed in 1983, and one-third of these were under the age of 30. Casper explained no one really knows how many suicides take place each year because many go unreported. "There are 12 teenage suicides per 100,000 of the population per year," Casper added.

Several researchers, Casper said, have tried to come up with a way to identify potential suidical individuals — a suicide scale, much like a stress scale. So many points are given to people using drugs or alcohol; so many points to people who have just lost their job, a spouse or relative. This scale does not work, Casper said. "The most painful thing to realize," she added was "out of 100,000 people, 100,000 are possible suicides."

There is no way to simplify suicidal risks. "Nobody is immune," Casper added. Even two year-olds have been known to commit suicide, she said.

After suicides have occurred researchers have interviewed relatives to get as many details as possible. These researchers have found that for every five deaths by suicide, only one is totally unexpected. The other four have given verbal warnings, statements or acted in a self-destructive way. Unfortunately their relatives were not trained to recognize these signals.

To prevent feelings of negligence and guilt, friends and relatives must know how to respond to signs of depression and suicide risk. Such signs may be as subtle as a change in sleep pattern, personality, behavior, eating habits, a worry about money or illness (real or imaginery), giving away one's favorite things, or the signs may be a direct statement. "I am going to kill myself," or drug or alcohol abuse.

Whatever the signs, Casper said, do not be afriad to ask the person: Are you feeling so bad about your life that you are thinking of killing youself? This question shows that you are taking the person and his or her feelings seriously. The notion that talking about suicide gives the person the idea is false, Casper said. The fact is putting the question out in the open can be a relief.

Casper said most people at one point in their lives have thought or will think about suicide. Yet, most pass through these points of depression and are able to deal effectively with their problems.

After the question is asked it is important to follow through and assess the risk of the particular person. In order to do this one must make a judgment as to how bad the risk is for a particular person at a particular time. The Samaritans use a scale of zero to nine, zero being the potential suicide risk attributed to an inanimate object such as a dish or chair and nine being "the lady in a psychiatric hospital who has jumped off the third floor and is on her way down." The zeroes and nines are the extremes, most of us fall in between.

"The normal reaction to a suicidal person is frightened flight," Casper said. This reaction is caused by people's need to protect themselves and by the lack of knowledge will make a small difference in their wretched lives.

Nurse begins mission to Ethiopia

It is not something unknown to this 29 year-old world traveler. After she graduated from New England Baptist School of Nursing, she entered the Peace Corps for two years, where she was stationed along the Andes Mountains in South America.

After returning home and traveling to Reno, Nevada where she obtained a nursing job, a former Peace Corps associate called and asked if she would be interested in helping provide medical care in Somalia through the Christian Relief and Development Service.

Although she was romantically involved at the time and declined the invitation, she later ended the relationship and accepted the offer.

"Two weeks later, I was in Somalia," she says.

Eileen is optimistic and positive about her new assignment in Africa, this time to the country which is battling against Somalia.

"As a nurse, I see death all the time. I think it is an emotional strain, but not so devastating to the point I feel helpless. I feel strong," Eileen says. "I have always pulled through. I know I will be strong and capable. That's why I was chosen."

That selection process of which she speaks was a lengthy and complicated one. Although she was asked to apply for the position in Ethiopia, she was not instantly chosen. The final selection was between herself and a doctor. Her previous experience and knowledge won out, and now Eileen will be one of four nurses traveling to Ethiopia. This is the first medical team sent from the United States to the African nation.

According to Eileen, "the Ethiopian government has not honored any other organization except Christian Relief and Development Association and they don't want a majority of people from one nation in their country."

Although there is a distinct lack of physicians assisting the nurses in the refugee camps, that is a situation caused by the government there. Many of Eileen's friends who are doctors here, have asked to go but are denied. Only Ethiopian doctors "and a few others," have been allowed access into the country, she adds.

"The real problem is a lack of medicine. In Somalia, we used old World War II medicine. Now that is being used up in Ethiopia. The government doesn't want us to go in there and take all that medicine and use U.S. doctors for two years and then leave them without any. They believe it will be more beneficial for them to use their own doctors. I think they have a point," Eileen explains.

Eileen Mullaney

Her experience in Somalia taught Eileen many things. One important lesson was that although she will work hard and will help many to regain their health, she is temporary. When she and all the others are gone, the Ethiopians must continue the struggle to survive alone.

"If my experience in Somalia is similar, then I will find about 500 children in need of medical care inside one big hut. These children, who really are all in need of care, must qualify for medical help. Very strict standards regulate who will receive medical attention, but I try to stretch those rules," she explains. "I will take an Ethiopian counterpart and we will take about 20 children at a time into a corner of the hut. That will be our health clinic.

"Then I will teach him to feel for a fever, and to listen to the chest. We will work together to treat these people with whatever medicines we have. It is important that the counterpart is trained to make diagnoses. I'll be out in six months to a year. But I hope to leave my knowledge behind," she says.

Although conditions are difficult for all who reside at the refugee camps, Eileen says the medical team will have a few comforts unkown to the African population. "Pampered" is how she describes their lives in this desolute land, parched by years of steaming daylight and no rain.

"We will have our meals flown in from Denmark. The medical workers do not eat the refugee's food. And every two weeks, we are required to take a week's R and R, although when I was in Somalia, I didn't have a vacation for four months," according to the nurse.

Traveling to a world of death

"That was wrong," she states. "By that time I was burnt out. We often work 24-hour shifts for six days without a break. You need the time to get away."

As if the daily occurrences of death, starvation and disease were not enough plague upon this land, there is another situation which Eileen will confront once again. Because of the stagnant pools of water around the camp, the bodies awaiting burial, and the human waste littering the site, there are also swarms of flies. That is the thing that sends chills down her neck.

"When I was in Somalia , I had several mosquito bites on my leg. The flies would attack the infection on my leg, until I started to bandage the entire lower leg. It was disgusting. This time, I got smart, and at the very least, I have a screen cover for my coffee cup," she notes.

As for her destination and home for the next year, Eileen says optimistically, "emotionally, I don't think it has really sunk in ye In my heart, I know I am doing the right thing. When I went to Somalia , I didn't think of what I was getting into and when I left there, I was depressed for three or four months. It's so different here. It's a simple difference of us having so much food, and so much waste.

"But if I can ease a little bit of the human suffering there - I realize I'm just a small part, I'm not doing a lot. But in my heart, I know it's the right thing."

The 1973 graduate of Cohasset High has tried repeatedly to explain her mission to family and friends and wonders if she has succeeded.

"I'm not a gypsy, and this isn't any altruistic thing for me. A lot of people think I have a death wish. But I don't think of myself like that. I like nice clothes and nice things. But this is the only way I can help others. I don't have a lot of money to donate, so I give them my medical knowledge and my time. That's all I can do," she explains.

So today she travels a great distance to a world unknown to most of us. It is a destination Eileen accepts with honor.

(Eileen will be corresponding with her family from time to time during her stay. With her approval, the Mariner will be publishing sections of those letters, describing the conditions of life in Ethiopia. Ed.)

Contributions

For those of you who would like to help ease the famine in Ethiopia, this is an organization Eileen Mullaney lists among the best. It not only provides food and water, but transportation and cooking utensils to send and prepare the food. All the money sent to this organization will be used to alleviate the famine in that country, she says.

have been issued. While his attorney is fighting that ruling, Staszko requested that the planning board hold off any decision regarding his plans. The board agreed, and according to chairman Christine Bassett, no notification has been given to the board members on the status of the appeal. In the meantime, neither the board nor the developer has reactivated the regulation which requires the planners to deny or approve a plan brought to them within 20 days.

It's been a very busy year for the planning board, according to Bassett, and the members are taking advantage of this holiday lull. While no new development plans are seen on the horizon, the planners are sitting down and attempting to revamp the zoning bylaw. Hopefully, she said, the proposed changes will be prepared by the annual town meeting.

Construction of the previously-approved Bergson's and Autohaus project can be seen along Route 3A. Both these plans were approved a few months ago by the planning board.

One plan which did not meet approval from the board this year was a request to build 11 residences , known as the Lily Pond Estates. That subdivision was to be located along watershed property, but that was not the prime factor in denying construction. Another subdivision proposed by Dr. P.Morrissey along King Street was recently approved by the board.

School roofing project

The condition of the school roofs has been a major consideration for the town this year. Although there was considerable doubt as to whether taxpayers would want to pay a half million dollars to repair roofs, that suspicion was unfounded.

Two town meetings, in June and in November, appropriated a lot of money to have the Deer Hill and high school roofs repaired. Town meeting in June appropr ated $551,000 for the project.

Then, after an intensive study was conducted of the high school roof membrane, it was found that certain sections of the roof were in worse condition than originally thought. Those sections were substituted for others, but the remaining sections were also determined to be in seriously-deteriorating condition.

Special town meeting voters in November were asked to fund $250,000 in additional high school roof repairs, and they complied.

According to Supt. Eugene Crowell, the Deer Hill School roof work has been completed. That work was done by MacDonald Sprague Roofing of Weymouth. The high school repairs are about three-quarters co npleted, with six additional sections to go. Crowell said, depending on the weather, crews from Titan Roofing of Chicopee are expected to be finished this winter.

SEMASS contract

Cohasset town meeting voters in November decided to enter into a multi-year contract with SEMASS, the trash-to-energy solid waste disposal company.

Asst. Town Counsel John Slater is acting as selectmen's liason in working out a contract with the company.

It was a long haul for several citizens before the SEMASS arrangement was agreed upon. Members of the Area Disposal Study Committee worked for years to study the lifespan of the Cedar Street dump, and to plan for the future. After months of investigation, the committee recommended that SEMASS was the most cost-efficient method for the town to pursue..

Chamber meeting

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce will hold its January meeting at 6:15 p.m., January 9; the meeting will take place at the Cohasset Colonial Showroom, 38 Parker Avenue, Cohasset.

Suggestions and reactions to the White Christmas in Cohasset event, the Chamber's seminar program, and other general business issues for 1985 will be discussed.

Members are asked to write their suggestions and submit them before the meeting. All written comments will be read during the meeting.

For further information, please contact John Hagerty at 383-0110.

Financial aid number

The Massachusetts Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (MASFAA) will offer its 1985 Financial Aid Awareness Month toll-free telephone counseling service for a four week period.

The eighth annual hot-line service will operate weeknights, from 5 to 9 p.m., Janury 15 to February 15, 1985. The Massachusetts toll-free student financial aid hotline number is: 1-800-325-2523.

In the past the hot-line ran throughout the month of January, but MASFAA members voted to begin the service later to assist parents and students in completing applications when family financial data is more readily available. "Without up-to-date and timely information, the (financial aid) process can be confusing," says Paul Combe, Boston College's director of financial assistance and MASFAA President." This is part of our effort to ensure that all needy Massachusetts residents have the opportunity to learn how to apply for all the student financial aid that is available to them," adds Pamela Gilligan, director of financial aid at Regis College and Coordinator of Awareness Month.

MASFAA volunteers answered over 1,700 calls on the 1984 Financial Aid Awareness Month hot-line and expect to answer even more during the 1985 telephone counseling service.

Village Fair supper

Saluting the leadership of the 1984 Cohasset Village Fair by the Panagia Greek Orthodox Church, the annual Village Fair dinner will be held Saturday evening, January 12, in St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

There will be a feast of Greek delicacies from roast lamb to baklava. The dinner is at 6:30 p.m.

Tickets for the dinner, limited in number because of the size of the hall, will be available at $10 from representatives to the Central Committee from each of the five participating churches.

These include Marilyn Fessler, Lee Jenkins and Barbara Hislop of the Congregational church; Linda Summers and Margaret Phelps from the Unitarian; Kathy Brennock and Theresa Smith from St. Anthony's; Betty Madden and Ginnie Nast of St. Stephen's and Mary Sofis of the Greek Orthodox Church.

Arrangements for the dinner are being handled by a group from the Greek church headed by Ernest Sofis of Hingham, as chairman, including Bill Papageorge of Hull and Bill Billikas of Quincy.

Looking for signs of suicide

of what to do in this situation.

The first thing one should think when "put on the spot" by a friend or relative is that anyone could be suicidal. "Think of Code Napoleon," Casper said. "Guilty until proven innocent or a suicidal risk until proven otherwise."

The second thing one should determine is the urgency of the situation. "It is always serious," Casper said, "but how urgent is the risk?"

In order to help you put the person somewhere on the scale — "assess the risk — " three important questions must be asked: Have you thought about how you will do it? When will you do it? and Where will you do it? Most people, Casper said, have not thought about how, when or where they will commit suicide. But if he or she does know then that person "is very close to acting on his suicidal feelings," Casper said. "Yet, if they tell them they are in the category of people who can be helped," Casper said.

Once you have assessed the risk of suicide, Casper said, you must attempt to lower the risk by asking two questions: Why do you feel so badly you want to end your life? and, What is suicide going to do for you?

"The whys," Casper said, "almost always never make sense to others." "Most people," she added, "answer with stupid reasons." Casper remembered a call to the Samaritans from a freshman at MIT who got a 97 on his advanced calculus exam. He wanted to kill himself because he failed to live up to his expectations. He believed he was destined to win a Nobel Prize in advanced mathematics like his father had. He thought he had no future and did not want to explain to his father "that he had a nerd for a son," Casper said. "You can't say his reasons are not good enough," Casper added, because the reasons are perfectly logical to him. The important thing, Casper said, is to enable the person to express his or her pain.

In answer to the second question — what is suicide going to do for you? — most people send a double message: I want to kill myself but I don't want to be dead. They want to die, to be free of the pain, but they do not want to be dead forever, Casper added. Not one person, she said, has responded to the question by saying they just want to be dead.

"When someone tells you, 'I'm going to kill myself,' what they are really saying," Casper said, "is 'I'm afraid I'm going to kill myself. Please help me.'"

"It's no good," she added, "unless the people they talk to are ready to respond, show they're taking them seriously."

Casper explained that two-thirds of the suicide attempts that end in death are made by men, while two-thirds of the non-fatal attempts are made by women. Suicidal behavior, however, is the same for men and women. "Men end up dead more than woman because of their choice of method," Casper said. Men tend to choose death by shooting or hanging which gives no second chance or opportunity for last-minute rescue such as drug overdose or inhaling carbon monoxide, methods women tend to use. However, women do use guns and men do overdose. Most people, Casper said, come to you before the overdose or hanging.

Half of these students lived in homes with guns and ammunition and 53 have come in contact with suicide through the feelings, attempts, or completion of suicide of a family member or friend, or through their own suicidal feelings.

At her meeting with 15 teachers and guidance counselors, Casper gave the same guidelines in order to help teachers assess and lower the risk of suicidal students or colleagues.

"It's so easy to go a little too far," Casper said, "when one only wants to attempt suicide and end the pain but does not want to die. "We can never ask them if they meant to do it," she said. "Chances are they don't want to do it."

Anyone who talks about suicide, Casper said, is a risk. "If people want attention," she added, "you've got to give it to them."

The person who wants to help must figure out what he or she can and cannot do. This ability protects the person from any guilt or feelings of negligence.

Casper added that the Just Noticeable Difference (JND) lets the suicidal person know he or she has someone to share the pain with.

Feelings are put into words to communicate how badly they feel. Be calm and listen to their pain.

"You don't have to talk anyone out of suicide," Casper said. "You listen them out of it."

Casper added a note of caution: The incidence of second suicide attempts is high. "People are very vulnerable after a suicide attempt," she said. "The time for suicide risk is when things start to get better. Support systems such as family members and friends pull back," Casper added, because they think the person has recovered. People will often hide their depression, she said, by becoming extremely busy and hyperactive.

Casper brought along a film, "Urgent Messages," to show both students and teachers. The stories of three teenagers were featured in the film. The first teenager, a girl, was in the one-out-of-five category who gave no sign whatsoever that she was thinking of killing herself. In fact her decision and attempt occurred within the space of 15 or 20 minutes — long enough for her to think how awful her life was, find her father's gun and shoot herself in the heart. She survived the attempt and told the psychiatrists that after she shot herself she realized she did not want to die.

The second teenager, a boy, expressed his suicidal feelings through his actions, not his words. He drove his car dangerously and finally attempted suicide by crashing in to a tractor trailor truck. He also lived.

The third teenager, also a boy, did not live. For approximately six months he gave his family and friends warning signs.

All 65 high school students present at the talk on suicide prevention, Casper said, listened attentively.

Charles E. Buntman 88, cuts his own firewood to store for winter heat. Buntman has always cut his own wood and remains physically active (Foley photo)

☐ Stephen E. Casey, son of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Casey, Fairoaks Lane, Cohasset, has been named to the Honor Roll for the first trimester it was announced today by the Avon Old Farms School, a college preparatory school for boys in Avon, Connecticut.

☐ Another Cohassetite that is attending Williston makes the news this week . . . Steve O'Connor, a three year letterman on the Williston hockey team, is the captain of his team this year. Steve has been a stand-out in hockey since he began playing, and won most improved player his first year at Williston. He plays defense.

☐ Ann and Bill Reardon of Westgate Lane had a grand, if quick, trip Dec. 11 and 12. They flew down to attend the opening night of the musical "La Cage Aux Folles" at the Saenger Performing Arts Center. Their son Peter, a 1977 Cohasset High graduate, is playing the part of Jean-Michele in this first National touring company presentation.

☐ Happy to hear that Nora Leary is making a rapid recovery, and here's hoping that she gets better even faster than her Doctors predict.

☐The 1985 edition of "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges" will include the names of 19 students from Westfield State College who have been selected as national outstanding leaders.

Students named this year from Westfield State College include Cohasset residents, Abigail Hobson, English major, Class of 1985, and Miss Elizabeth Hobson, Economics major, Class of 1985.

☐The Merchants in downtown Cohasset certainly did more than ever to make the shopping season an event to remember this year. The lights, the "White Christmas" theme, the lovely windows, and all of the super merchandise certainly combined to make Christmas shopping in Cohasset a pleasurable, and local, success. Everyone deserves a pat on the back.

☐Congratulations to Mr. William Ripley, who was awarded a Paul Harris Fellowship by the Rotary Club. The Award was given to Mr. Ripley at the Christmas party and he was given a certificate medal and lapel pin (they signify the highest aware which can be bestowed on an individual rotarian). Mr. Ripley is the first Paul Harris Fellow in the Cohasset Club, and as was said that night "it couldn't happen to a finer, more deserving gentleman."

☐Bruce and Mary Edmonds spent Christmas in Texas, with their daughters and their families. A great time was had by all.

☐Pat Leonard and Charlie Brady love the college life. They are students at Clemson and like both the school and the weather. Too bad we couldn't all follow the paw prints in South Carolina to a nifty climate.

☐Get good reports on Lee Wilson, who is putting in a lot of hours studying for finals. Good boy, Lee.

☐Harold Litchfield's house was very festive, indeed, and enjoyed by all who saw it in passing by. Could it have been a little more than usual this year because of his celebrating a "biggie" birthday? You might know the only night that they had to worry about snow all year was the night his party took place! I don't think I have to tell you that the town came first.

☐Make it a resolution to keep us informed on your news. It's fun to read and fun to write about.

Happy New Year!

Cohasset was Hingham's Second Precinct

Hingham's 350th anniversary, being celebrated during 1985, reminds us that Cohasset once was Hingham's Second Precinct and Second Parish before it became a separate town in the year 1770, some 135 years after the establishing of the parent settlement at Bare Cove.

Not until 1670 had the upland areas of east Hingham or Conahasset been divided up among Hingham landowners. The first settlers in the Conahasset area were Hingham families who built farms and homesteads in several scattered parts of the newly opened Conahasset uplands.

Clement Bates and Ibrook Tower located near today's King Street, Israel Nichols lived next to the rough highway now called Jerusalem Road at Strait's Pond, Perth MacFarlin built at Turkey Meadow in an area of Conahasset which today has since reverted to the town of Hingham, Daniel Lincoln constructed his home near Little Harbor and the Town Common, and Nathaniel Nichols settled on the ocean's edge near today's Black Rock Beach.

John Jacob soon built his homestead near the cold spring at the present Spring Street. There were others, also, whose identities are not clear in the early records.

From Plymouth Colony came Aaron Pratt, son of Phineas of the old settlement at Wessagusset. More Conahasset settlers carried the names of Lincoln, Farrar, Horswell, James, Lasell, Orcutt, Souther, Stodder, Wilcut and Wilson, all from Hingham.

Conahasset's earliest roads may have been old Indian trails which began as cart paths used by the first harvesters of salt hay at Hingham's eastern shores. Additional highways soon developed to link together the scattered farms and homesteads springing up in several places.

But the journey between the new settlement at Conahasset and the parent town of Hingham, some four miles in length, continued to be difficult in the extreme, and dangerous during winter months. By the year 1711 more than 20 families lived in the Conahasset area, and most found the overland trips to the town's Meeting House and school to be arduous if not impossible.

The fact was that the new village often was not able to send representatives to Town Meetings, nor were its children able to attend the distant schoolhouse. Conahasset's young people were lacking the advantage of education, and its families frequently unable to participate in the vital municipal and religious functions of the town. Still missing from the growing community in east Hingham were two important figures, a clergyman and a school teacher.

Finally, on May 17, 1713, Hingham voters gave their consent for the building of a new Meeting House on the town's Common Land at Conahasset. They also granted Conahasset residents the liberty to engage a clergyman of their own choice. The first meeting house and church soon was constructed, but several years were to pass before a permanent clergyman could be found. Despite the concessions made by Hingham's voters, agitation continued to increase among the Conahasset families for limited autonomy in the form of a separate Precinct in Hingham's eastern section.

This movement for the establishment of a precinct was strongly opposed in the parent town and Conahasset's petitions were defeated at Hingham Town Meetings. Finally, the acrimonious dispute between the two villages was placed before the Colonial Government at Boston, where it was settled.

November 1717 the Great and General Court of the Massachusetts Bay Colony enacted a bill establishing Conahasset as a separate Precinct and Parish in the town of Hingham. Thus the growing community of East Hingham achieved a certain autonomy, particularly in matters of religion and schools. Conahasset became the Second Precinct and Second Parish with the right to maintain its own church and schoolhouse, and to levy taxes for the support of a minister and a teacher.

Cohasset's first record book of Precinct and Parish Meetings begins with the first meeting, held on July 14, 1718. At that meeting, Precinct voters chose Daniel Lincoln to be the Moderator and Thomas James as Clerk. A committee made up of John Orcutt, Joshua Bates and Joseph Bates were appointed to warn and

Our resolution

Last week, during Christmas vacation, there were a couple of car accidents on the South Shore involving teens, death and tragedy. Both incidents made front page news for several days as the media covered the accident, the police follow-up, the family reactions, and the funerals.

They are important news stories which command high reader interest. Everyone wants to know when, where, why, how and what exactly happened that caused these youths to be killed or hurt. Tragedies have always attracted mass appeal.

There is nothing more gruesome to a reporter than covering the scene of an accident. No one wants to be there, gathering the facts as they instantaneously unfold in confusion. As hard as they try, it's almost impossible for the press to get a completely accurate picture of all that happened - police might not have all the facts, family members are grieving beyond communication. Each witness to the accident will have an individualized account of what actually occurred, and none may be correct.

Going back to the newsroom to write the story, the reporter feels the desperation of the moment, yet is buoyed by the knowledge that he is about to write what will be the front page lead story, the most widely-read article in tomorrow's paper. As tragic as the situation is, the reporter is ignited into action by the adrenalin activated by a 'scoop' story.

We are guilty - of ignoring compassion, of forfeiting feelings for the sake of a good story. Not only do we describe the gnarled masses of metal, the twisted, lifeless bodies crumpled inside. We go back for more. One story is not enough.

Let's not kid anyone. Reporters don't go back and sit with a grieving mother to let her know how badly we all feel for her. We sit with her, allow her to tearfully flip through the pages of a family photo album, fully aware that this is going to make a great story for the next edition.

The families and friends of the deceased are at their most vulnerable point right now, and don't you believe for a moment that we won't feed upon that.

We sit at their kitchen tables, pretending to be a welcomed friend in their time of need, while carefully taking down every utterance. This will be an important story.

Friends and family members enter the home and make comments in confidence. We permeate their conversation with our pens like a poison. Then it appears in print, on the front page. Another big story that strangers will devour as hungrily as we gathered it.

The Mariner is as guilty of such atrocities as every other newspaper. We would like to say it never happens; that we will always feel compassion for our readers; that we will be sensitive to them in their times of need; that we will not publish stories for the sake of volume sales, knowing the pain it will cause even one of our readers.

That is not always a simple feat. But it is possible, while continuing to be a professional, competent journal.

That is our resolution in 1985.

The race at Bound Brook

By M.S. Maire

Bound Brook,
Hardly a brook at all,
The northern reach of Plimouth,
The limit of Boston's sway,
A swamp but little more,
One arm of that great tidal pond
That feeds Cohasset Harbor.

Through a race: Mill Race;
Shouldered by granite walls
Smoothed by the rushing waters
Four times a day,
For years,
Decades, centuries, eons,
Forever.

The whole Atlantic
Trying to fit between
Those rocky flanks,
Pushing and shoving, impolite,
Crowding and jostling, impatient,
Roaring and screaming
To get within.

And it does
For an instant.
I have seen the waters still
On a foggy night.
Silent
For an instant.
Slick with darkness,
Listening to a distant horn
Talk of shoals and shipwrecks, Mournfully.

And then there comes a sound.
A silent sound.
A sound unheard but loud,
As is a dripping faucet
In the night.
Another sound.
A little swirl
Forms behind a piling,
Disappears, returns, unsure.
The sound becomes a giggle,
Then a chuckling, then a laugh.
Laughing at the ocean
Rushing out.

Roaring at the water
Piling up
On every rock and boulder,
Tumbling, roiling water,
Sizzling, singing to escape,
Frothing, foaming, sweeping
Through the Cove,
Down the channel,
O'er the banks.

A few new resolutions ... for him

By Claire McDonough

"I'm writing New Year's Resolutions," I announced. "This year I'm going to start extra early so I can give them all the consideration they merit."

The Dragon looked at me suspiciously.

"You're making resolutions for me again, aren't you?" he asked.

I nodded virtuously. "It's a good wife's duty to help her husband's character develop."

The Dragon looked indignant. "I suppose as usual you'll start off by telling me I should stop smoking."

"I don't know why you make that assumption," I replied, surreptitiously removing the ashtray from his desk, "and anyway, you know you ought to stop."

"That's beside the point," he told me. "The point is that they're my resolutions and I should get to make them. How come I don't get to write resolutions for you?"

"Because," I smiled smugly, "it's my column."

He sighed. "What other character developments do you have in store for me?"

"Well," I said, "you could pretty much sum it up by saying, 'Ask not what your wife can do for you; ask rather what you can do for your wife,' but I've decided to be more specific."

"I'll just bet you have. What specifics has your twisted little mind come up with?"

"I'll ignore that," I said serenely, "because I am above petty bickering and because once you adopt these resolutions life is going to be so much smoother around here.

"For openers, you're going to resolve not to lose your temper so often. Particularly if your wife should happen to put just the tiniest dent in the left rear fender."

The Dragon sat upright. "A dent? In the fender? What happened?"

"We'll discuss that after you make the resolution," I told him. "But I would like to point out that the muscles in your neck are bulging and your face is red. Clearly your character could stand improvement in this area.

"Also," I continued hastily, "you're going to resolve to be neater. Overflowing ashtrays in every room in the house are not only health and fire hazards, they are esthetic disasters."

He looked stunned. "How can someone whose nylons and cosmetics are strewn all over the bedroom and the bathroom and who has never thrown a newspaper out in her entire life and who keeps things in the refrigerator so long she could start her own penicillin store say that with a straight face?"

I smiled. "The assertiveness training is starting to pay off.

"You will, of course, also resolve to be more patient and soft spoken."

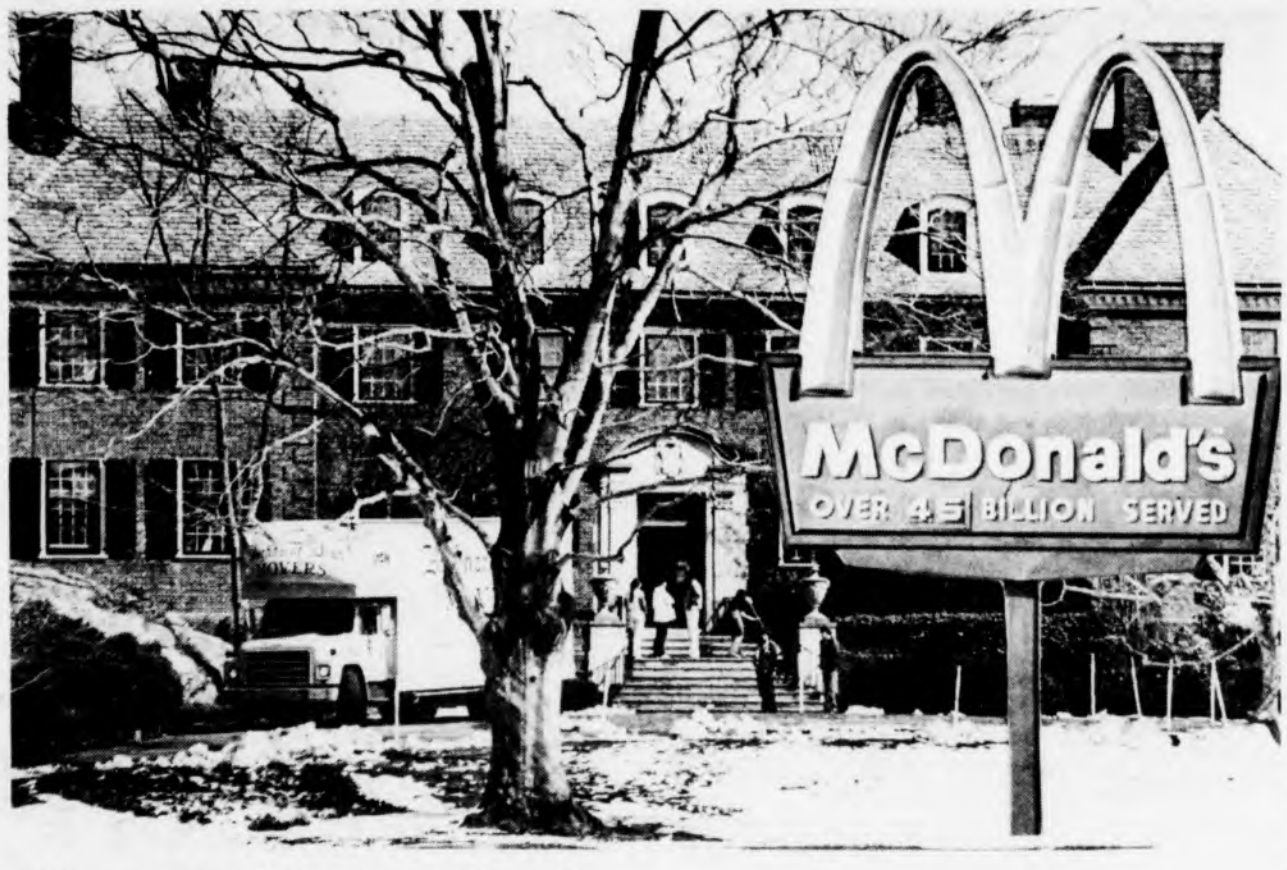
The Dragon leapt to his feet.

"How can you say that?" he shouted. "I have the patience of Job! And I rarely raise my voice?"

"Then why," I asked him "did you remove the fuse for the bathroom when I was blow-drying my hair this morning?

"And why, when you tell your dog to 'sit' does the Blanchard's dog on Foxwell Lane drop to his haunches?"

"No," I shook my head sadly, "it's obvious that you need these resolutions.



"It's just lucky for you that you're married to someone who cares. You have the opportunity to develop unselfishness, an even temper, neatness, patience, and a pleasant speaking voice."

I'm not sure what he muttered under his voice, but it sounded something like, "If I weren't married, I wouldn't need any of those things."

Maybe I'll think up a few resolutions for myself, too.

Last April marked the passing of Cohasset native Gilbert Tower, known throughout his long life as one of the most vocal citizens of this town. Whether it was town planning or engineering issues, Gilbert always made his opinions known. A member of the Old Goats gang, Gilbert was an honored citizen of the community and is sorely missed by all.

This was voted by our staff as the Cohasset Mariner photo of the year. It was used in our April 1 parody issue in which we reported a McDonald's franchise was coming to the former Cox estate. Just in jest, you know.

Household Hazardous Waste Disposal Day in September was such a resounding success that another will be held this spring. Jeff Bettinger, chairman of the Hazardous Waste Committee, hopes to make the disposal day bi-annual events, in the spring and fall. Twenty-one barrels of household paints, oils and other toxic substances were left at the Town Hall parking lot where they were transported away by a professional disposal firm. In fact, the collection contract amount with SCA was limited to $1610, and that amount of barrels was filled by 1 p.m.

This, as if everyone didn't know, is Sewer Commissioner Chairman Charles DeSantis. In a Mariner contest held last winter, DeSantis, the leading proponenet behind the town's efforts for an alternative wastewater treatment project, was voted the Mariner's Person of the Year. He has one of the most recognizable faces in town, and in the Boston offices of the DWPC, the DEQE, the EPA . . .

The Eighth annual Cohasset Race-By-The-Sea was held last April. From a field of 750 starters, 633 completed the 10 K course. That was a record number of entrants. The race, sponosored by the Cohasset Rotary Club, saw Bert Petracca of Marshfield finish in 30 minutes, 20 seconds - his second Cohasset title. Sarah Linsley, a Cohasset native, won the 18-39 division for the eighth straight year. Her time was 34:50.

Second Precinct . . .

announce the holding of future meetings. The most important business of the new Precinct was to find a permanent clergyman to occupy the pulpit of the Parish Church. Thus began a search which would last until the year 1722 when the Rev. Nehemiah Hobart, grandson of Hingham's first minister Rev. Peter Hobart, accepted the call of Conahasset's Parishioners and raised a home on today's North Main Street, across the street from the Precinct Meeting House where he would preach.

In matters other than schools and church, municipal authority remained vested in the town government at Hingham. The precincting of Conahasset may have solved the problems of education and worship, but roads to Hingham remained difficult to traverse, and the new Precinct found itself continually under-represented at important Town Meetings held in the parent village.

The discontent remained and soon became disaffection as Conahasset's families longed for a final and complete separation from Hingham. The new community on the eastern shore grew rapidly to become a center of seafaring activity and shipbuilding to rival its older parent. Agriculture, small industry and fishing combined to produce a thriving group of villages in the uplands and along the shore, and strong community leadership developed within the Second Precinct.

Thus it happened that fifty three years after the establishing of the Precinct, its residents once again went before the Great and General Court of the Colony praying for separation from the original town.

April 26, 1770, the petitioners were granted their wish to incorporate the second Precinct in Hingham into a District by the name of Cohasset. Cohasseter Benjamin Lincoln was further instructed to see that a meeting would be held to organize the new District. The signature of Colonial Lieut. Governor Hutchinson made it official on the same day, and the new town found its most cherished dreams realized with the stroke of a Royal pen.

Despite some hard feelings lingering on both sides, long since buried, parent and offspring communities found it easy to work together for their next common goal, the Independence of their colony and the founding of a new nation.

Skills training class

Representative Murray wants to alert her constituents regarding the South Coastal Skills Center who are currently recruiting residents of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull for a Secretary Training Course.

Rep. Murray said, "The course will begin February 11, 1985, and run for a 22-30 week period. Interested applicants must apply on or before January 25, 1985, at the South Coastal Skills Center, 11 Hayward Street, North Quincy, MA."

"There are certain eligibility guidelines, primarily a high school diploma or equivalent education. Women and minorities are encouraged to apply," Mary Jeanette stated.

The curriculum consists of business English, typing — including machine transcription and calculator, business math, accounting — including basic math review, shorthand, and word processing.

The training course objective is to develop and achieve typing, bookkeeping, English and shorthand skills which will lead to successful entry into bookkeeping secretarial and general office positions.

There are job opportunities in the secretarial field paying from $180 per week to $220 per week. Many employers have good benefit packages, including insurance and paid vacations.

Another item of importance according to Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray is the South Coastal Career Development Administration, recruiting youth for a High School Equivalency Program designed to service high school drop-outs, ages 16-21. This program will begin in January, 1985, and consist of remedial education and work experience.

Applications may be obtained: South Coastal Career Development Administration, 11 Hayward Street, North Quincy, MA 02171.

If you have any questions contact the South Coastal Skills Center at 328-7300.

Once upon a time, not so far away, a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.
There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.
Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.
Now it's coming true again.
All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.
Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.
This fall, Dreamwold is available at pre-completion prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.
It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

Sen. Allan McKinnon aimed for the public good

By Mike Berger

There were those political prognosticators back in the early 1970s who said Allan McKinnon wouldn't last in the state Senate when he voted to sustain the governor's veto against the death penalty bill.

It is now 14 years later and McKinnon says he is going out of office now with a clear conscience. He did not vote on controversial issues based on his own political survival or to "get myself re-elected.

"I tried to be independent and vote for the public good rather than to save a vote," McKinnon said.

Reflecting on 14 years of legislative service, McKinnon recalled major successes in the South Shore's economic growth, minor wins on transportation and more progress for consumers on car insurance.

Transportation and car insurance marked McKinnon's voice in the State Senate. But he was no shrinking violet when it came to leadership disputes with Senate President Billy Bulger.

McKinnon was incensed during the last days of the former Gov. Ed King administration when the House and Senate voted for many dubious economic packages as well as favoring many political appointments.

At that time McKinnon blasted Bulger's leadership. But now he has a more reflective insight into the Senate President as well as a keen political observation insight into "Legislator Doublespeak."

There are many legislators, McKinnon says who should look within themselves for political courage. "To save their political lives, some legislators tell different stories to different people."

Everyone is now calling for rules reform. "Although I favor some rules reform I do think the number one way to make the Legislature better is really up to the voters and the quality of the people we send up there."

There are some legislators, McKinnon says, who are now calling for rules reform, who looked to the House and Senate leadership to take the brunt of a tax decision off the backs of individual legislators during an election year. This occurred back in the mid 1970s when the state found itself in a major economic crisis.

"There are some who say the leadership in the Senate is too strong. On the other hand look at what's happened in the House this year. It's legislative anarchy. We had the least productive year in the history of House because of this leadership fight."

Billy Bulger, said McKinnon, is one of the brightest men in the Senate. He acknowledges Bulger is a person of high principals, a tremendous family man and quietly does a lot of good for individuals.

But the key to understanding Bulger, McKinnon added, is to understand this theory - urban versus suburban legislators. "Re-election for Billy Bulger is not a concern for him. In South Boston, Billy Bulger is the man. In my district, I have a mix of people of different political persuasions. Here, people follow the issues and react differently. He is the President of the Senate and there are 39 other senators with all different types of philosophies."

What's the answer to sound leadership. "It's not a simplistic answer. I guess it has to be a wise exercise of power. But also the answer is what we're looking for and what is in the eyes of the beholder? Whose perspective is it?"

Sen. Allan McKinnon

TRANSPORTATION

Because of population growth, McKinnon said the state owes an obligation to the South Shore to finally come up with a master plan with realistic goals and solutions. Although it's been a long time coming, McKinnon says the Dukakis administration is now gearing its transportation planning priorities toward this goal.

"They (Dukakis administration) want to help but they aren't promising miracles overnight," he said.

McKinnon has tried various to lobby for support for such commuter alternatives such as more buses, commuter boats, synchronizing the lights on Rte. 3A and widening Rte. 3. But he acknowledges the wheels of progress work slow and many environmental hurdles face the restoration of the rail line.

One alternative McKinnon pushed until his last days in the Legislature is for commuters to use the breakdown lane on Rte. 3 in the same manner commuters have used it on the Southeast Expressway. This proposal, he said, has a good chance of being implemented if safety officials find there are no traffic dangers.

CAR INSURANCE

Like Legislative Rules Reform, McKinnon acknowledges there is no simplistic answer to the question of high auto insurance rates.

'Some people say well this state has lower rates. Why can't Massachusetts? Well, I'd like to see it but there are many factors such as the weather, population density, auto theft and driver habits."

Part of the problem also stems from the intense lobby by the insurance companies. As Senate Chairman of the Insurance Committee, McKinnon says he has tried to be the advocate for consumers. Often times he looks at the list of full and part-time lobbyists for the insurance companies and asks himself, 'Who is lobbying for the consumers?'

He is happy the Legislature finally approved the 1983 Auto Insurance Reform Act which rewards good drivers and puts much of the financial costs for those drivers who break traffic laws.

There are also some other bills McKinnon has filed which if passed could save more money for good drivers. Under the no fault system, a victim cannot sue for pain and suffering unless medical bills reach $500 in medical bills. The problem, McKinnon says is some people abuse the system by falsely claiming other people's ailments. He would like to see the minimum raised to $1,000 or $1500.

The biggest savings could come in mandatory seat belts, now being implemented in New York. The major key to controlling auto insurance is controlling expenses, the cost for offering insurance and claim fraud.

THE FUTURE

The talk around Beacon Hill for some time is when the governor's Land Bank program passes, Allan McKinnon will be appointed to some administrative capacity. There is no doubt Gov. Mike Dukakis finds an ally in the Weymouth resident.

McKinnon acknowledges he has had some private discusssions with the governor but isn't divulging those conversations.

He will say Allan McKinnon will stay in government in some capacity.

McKinnon stresses he has enjoyed serving in the Senate and although at times found it frustrating, he acknowledges helping the public made it satisfying to him. "If I made bureaucracy work for one individual, then I have done my job. I feel I can go out of the Senate knowing I served the public to the best of my ability with the public interest in mind."

Dramatic Club tryouts

A reminder—the Cohasset Dramatic Club is holding tryouts for its winter production of Paul Osborn's American play "Morning's At Seven" this Sunday, January 6, from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. at Cohasset's Town Hall.

Copies of the playbook are available at the Paul Pratt memorial Library, Cohasset. Roles to be filled include five women and four men in this 1930's Broadway hit play.

Directing the Dramatic Club's production of "Morning's At Seven" is Denise Ripley. Sheldon Ripley will be the Scene Designer, Tom Finegan in charge of Stage Lighting and Wayne Miessner is Stage Manager.

"Morning's At Seven" is the story of two families living in mid-America during the 1930's, and is a warm and often poignant commentary upon American life.

Performance dates for "Morning's At Seven" are Friday, Saturday and Sunday March 1 through 3. All are invited to read for roles in this well-known American play.

Rivalry spirit heated up for Christmas tournament

By Mike Berger

Mark Tuesday, Jan. 8 at 7 p.m. at the Scituate High School gymnasium on the calendar for Part II of the noted Cohasset-Scituate basketball rivalry.

Packed stands at last week's Christmas Tournament showed great hoop interest. Cohasset beat Scituate 58-45 to win the boys title while the girls dominated the Sailors squad 61-35.

The boys contest was much closer than the score indicates. A Cohasset eight to ten point lead prevailed much of the night.

The difference was Skipper guard Tony Bogarty who took control in the fourth quarter with several key assists when the Sailors defense was pressing. Bogarty earned the Most Valuable Player award for the tournament and scored 42 points in the tournament.

The Skippers were also aided by the play of Jim Creed who scored 18 points and blocked six shots and Bryan Edwards who added 12 points. David MacDonald added six points and played exceptional defense.

Scituate was led by the 22-point performance of Center Paul Considine and by John Wilson who added ten points. Considine and Wilson were named to the All-Tournament Team.

The Skippers are now undefeated at 6-0 while the Sailors are 4-1. The Jan. 8 game between both teams is more important though as the contest counts as a South Shore League game.

Cohasset and Scituate entered the final game of the tournament by beating Holbrook and Copley High School of Boston respectively.

In girls' action, Cohasset overcame a ten point halftime deficit to beat Marshfield 56-47 and then dominated the Sailors 61-35 to take the tournament crown. The Skippers are also 6-0 in the league's Small School Division.

In the Scituate game, Cohasset was led by Tournament MVP Tracy Fitzpatrick who scored 16 points and by All-Tournament Guard Jane DiGirolamo who add 14 points. Carla Lucas chipped in with 11 points.

Aggie Sill led the Sailors with 11 points. In earlier action, Scituate defeated Hull 34-30 thanks to a strong effort from the bench.

Scituate was behind 18-14 at the half and 28-24 at the end of the third quarter but outscored Hull 10-2 in the final period. Sill led all scorers with 15 points and Ali Wannop added 10 points as she scored eight of her points in the fourth quarter and was exceptional on defense with seven steals.

Scituate Center Paul Considine seems to have control of the rebound as he outmuscled Cohasset's Bobby Shultz during the finals of the Christmas Tournament at Scituate High School.

THE ISLAND OF LEWIS & HARRIS

Harris tweed is woven by hand on a tiny island in tthe Atlantic Ocean, 40 miles off the coast of Scotland. The 195 square mile outpost is called the Island of Lewis and Harris. Although not known as a tourist destination, many travelers make their way there to purchase the tweed at bargain prices and sample its quiet, good life. The best times are between May and October, when the storms are minimal and the shops and guest houses are open. In August, the heather is in bloom and red-deer hunting season is at hand. In summer, one can fish for sea trout and salmon, stroll beaches and watch for rare birds.

Begin the New Year with a resolution to enjoy your leisure vacation time to the fullest. Here at COLPITTS TRAVEL CENTER, WE CAN HELP MAKE YOUR VACATION A TRULY MEMORABLE AND EXCITING EXPERIENCE. Come in and talk your plans over with us. You will find us conveniently located at 3 Brook St., Scituate. Our office is open to serve you 9-5 Mon.-Fri.; 10-4 Sat. and by appointment. We can be reached at 545-4500 and 383-1717.

This is the time of year that New England homes get hit with severe storms and high winds. I get many calls from homeowners who are troubled with leaks around their chimneys. Most often their roofs are fine. The problem is simply that the wind driven snow and rain penetrates the pourous brick of the chimney. This is a problem that you can easily identify by going into your attic and examining the brick on a dry day. If you are having an ongoing problem, there will be white stains running down the brick caused by the lime in the chimney. Usually this can be remedied by having a mason waterproof your exposed brick.

Finally, whenever you are having roofing or siding done on your home, ask for a Massachusetts Builder's License and insurance. Both are required by law.

"We're Selling the South Shore House by House"

Gerry Studds was victorious this November in what he described as the "campaign of a lifetime." For the first time, the voters elected an admitted homosexual to public office. Studds won the Congressional election over challenger Lewis Crampton, another Cohasset native, but not by his usual wide margin. Crampton moved in on traditional Studds territory, defeating the incumbent in several towns, including Cohasset.

This scene depicts what has become to be a Cohasset summertime tradition — litter left from the night before at Sandy Beach. Once again, after protests were registered by residents and neighbors about the condition of the beach, selectmen met with the police chief about ways to curb nocturnal activity at the beach. Residents complained the kids have no recreational facilities available at night. Police said there is little they can do except to patrol the areas where the kids congregate. Police said it is up to the parents to know where their kids are when they leave the home. Everyone agreed this is a problem that will occur annually until a solution is devised.

Selectmen, in an attempt to stop the summertime tradition of jumping off the Border Street bridge, requested state funds to renovate the bridge, and to construct a ten-foot wire fence atop the concrete rails, ala the expressway overpasses. Residents and neighbors fumed about the idea, and the Historical Society members voiced their disapproval of such a notion. The bridge, which has been photographed for generations is one of the most scenic spots in town. Selectmen took the hint from protesting residents and the guardrail idea has been trashed. Town officials would still like to get some state monies for needed repairs to the aging edifice.

This is an important photo for two reasons., First there was a tie vote in the April election for selectmen — the first in the history of the state. Incumbent Mary Jane McArthur and challenger Doris Golden each collected 1000 votes. During a subsequent recount, Mary Jane was declared winner. Golden later challenged the recount in court, during which a couple of ballots were misplaced. The entire mess concluded in a special election June. 30. This time Mary Jane won by a 2-1 margin. Second, during the summer, selectmen discussed the need to renovate Town Hall. Initial plans called for the possibility of razing the stage within the auditorium, making room for needed office space. Townspeople reacted fast and furiously against the proposal. Plans to renovate the historic building are being studied by a special committee. Meanwhile, selectmen have not dared speak of the future of the Town Hall stage. But it's looking better than ever with a new coat of fresh paint that was recently applied throughout the auditorium.

Whatever the world, we are not helpless . . .

By Lois Martin

I didn't want to write about this. This space here and the time I spend filling it is ordinarily my "rocking chair writing." For me it's a break, comfortable, sometimes confidential, relaxing on the job.

But it is not possible to sit at my breakfast table warm and cozy, limiting myself to one piece of homemade oatmeal bread, reading the paper . . . and then crying because of the news.

The news of Ethiopia is not new. It is just so damned unrelenting. They keep starving, dying, hurting, hungering. And they did that right through our Christmas as we muttered about what on earth we'd do with the leftovers.

PATCHES

You understand, I know you do, I'm not chiding us for being full or festive or fortunate.

I'm just saying that as a fellow human being sharing this planet and the time with a woman who can't feed her twin babies because of her own starvation, that I despair for their pain.

When "60 Minutes did a story on Ethiopia, the media coverage broke the ice on something we'd known about but about which we had said little. Since then there's been a floodtide of information, photos, from there. And from here our country has sent significant shipments of food that we prayed to God got there.

This morning's story told about a Christmas shipment of thousands of purple pants, for gosh sakes. Pants must be vital, but if I were starving, they wouldn't be what I hoped was in the plane.

I've never been one to fall down in a swoon at the mention of a Kennedy.

But I'll tell you no one, no one in our country knows how to hurt better than one of that family does. They have known pain and they sure as the devil have shared that of others. There was a photo of Ted Kennedy, our U.S. Senator, in this Globe.

There he stood in the Sudan's daytime shirtsleeve weather, with the slight paunch near the beltline. And he covered his face as he wept within the cluster of the starving new arrivals, who found no food when they got where there was supposed to be some.

So I, full, warm, I cried too. And I, again, can't get it out of my mind. It is something beyond Ethiopia. It is futility.

The fact that the Bible, for one, warned the poor will always be with us doesn't cut it. Starvation till further notice won't abate their pain, or our shame that they have it. Most of us have given somehow to alleviate the hunger. We've tried to pick the best resources through which to forward food, wondering if it gets there, bedeviled by the knowledge that a lot gets spoiled, stolen, lost, who knows what . . . And that they'll keep on starving, mostly without cries of complaint.

Those pictures . . . hapless, helpless, near complacency as they sit and starve in turn.

I, probably like you, have considered what it would be like, going to Ethiopia. And we've known that in other years and decades we could have gone to scenes like that one where drought and famine wrought cities of living dead.

Somehow, though, this morning, this beginning of '85, it was not possible to put it aside. I wish in lieu of what seems an echo dissertation on the crisis, there could be here viable instructions for reducing their hunger pronto, the how-to for good food quickly to their mouths.

No such thing. Keep plugging and providing and praying as best we can, I guess.

...And remembering, the day we don't give a hoot, we shall be hopeless. That we are not.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

By Joan Pinkham

The tree is shedding, the turkey has made its final appearance in the form of soup and even the fruit cake has gone the way of all holiday goodies. It wasn't our favorite white Christmas—not even a dusting of snow—but wreaths and colorful lights graced many a home to remind us of the holiday season at every bend of the road. Diets were gaily abandoned as we munched our way through brunches, lunches, teas and open houses. I managed to pick up a few recipes along the way, among them this luscious dessert. The Neiman Marcus Christmas Catalogue offers a glimpse into the proverbial "lap of luxury" and featured here is their Chocolate Liqueur Cake laced with almonds and soaked in 16 ounces in Amaretto. It weighs 4 pounds, costs "only" $36.00, plus $3.50 in shipping charges. Well, Gloria Pitzer recreated the cake this way:

AMARETTO AFTER DINNER FUDGE BUNDT CAKE

1/2 c. oil
1¼ c. cold water
2 tsp. almond extract
2 tsp. vanilla
18-oz. box Devil's Food Cake Mix
4-serving size instant chocolate pudding powder

In 2-qt. mixing bowl beat eggs, oil & water on high speed till blended. Add cake mix and pudding powders, beat 4 min., medium speed, scraping down sides of bowl frequently. Grease 12-cup Bundt pan in Crisco (not Pam this time). Spread batter evenly into pan. Bake in 350F oven for 1 hour—or until tester comes out clean. Cool in pan upright, 15 min. Invert cake onto powdered sugar-coated platter. Decorate with this

GLAZE

1/2 c. 80-proof Vodka
1 T almond extract, 1½ tsp. vanilla
1 c. powdered sugar

Blend approx. 1 min., until smooth. Drizzle over warmish cake, a little at a time, allow cake to absorb the glaze. Stop a few minutes and drizzle a bit more of glaze, until glaze forms an overflow puddle around plate rim. Chill cake several hours before serving. Slice cake thin. Serves 15 to 18. Refrigerate leftover cake, covered, to serve within a week or so.

I've asked myself why it is that those who like to garden are usually good cooks. The two seem to go hand-in-hand; perhaps if you grow your own herbs or veggies, you naturally seek out recipes and ways of serving them. Women who design their own flower beds learn the basics of arranging cut blossoms, drying them to make wreaths and table decorations and so I guess the link between gardening and cooking is the art of creativity. Those at the Christmas workshop of our little garden club know what I mean as Christmas centerpieces, swags and boxwood trees took shape as we sipped hot punch and breads mid-morning, followed at lunch by such dishes as Barbara Burnham's

CREAM OF MUSHROOM SOUP

3 T butter
1 T chopped onion
1/4 - 1/2 lb. finely chopped mushrooms
1 T flour
2 c. chicken broth
Salt and pepper to taste
Lemon juice
1/2 c. cream

Melt butter. Add onions and mushrooms. Cook slowly 15 min. Stir in flour. Slowly add broth. Bring to boiling point and cook slowly for 20 min. in a double boiler. Season to taste. Add cream just before serving. Add 1/2 tsp. sherry to each dish.

One day just before Christmas when I should have been doing last-minute errands, the sun and spring-like air lured me down to the beach. Away from the crowded stores, it seemed like stepping into another world, for the 60-degree temperatures and sky as blue as an ocean so calm that you could hear the waves breaking against the white sands, had attracted a few joggers. A golden retriever bounded into the water and gulls circled a trawler just off-shore, while closer to the beach, three men fished from their Boston Whaler. Simple meals are in order on days when we goof off and so I came home to make these inexpensive, easy

PORCUPINE MEATBALLS

1 lb. hamburg
1 c. uncooked rice
1 tsp. salt
1 small chopped onion
1 egg
1 can tomato soup

Mix all but soup together into meatballs. Place in casserole and cover with the soup. Cover and cook for 45 min. in a 350 degree oven. Rice comes through the meatballs.

Town turns attention to solving computer woes

Last week, selectmen were hoping to hire a municipal accounting expert to locate problems within the town's $90,000 computer system.

But after initially approving the $1000 budget transfer request last week, advisory committee members reconsidered their vote Tuesday night and deferred payment. After talking with Town Accountant William Signorelli, who is attempting to work out some of the bugs within the system, advisors Thomas Burke and Jill O'Donnell suggested the committee deferr payment to the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA) consultant. They suggested that John and Marilyn Keane, the computer experts who volunteered their services to design the system and programs used by the town, be asked to re-analyze the system.

They explained that Signorelli is pleased with the system purchased a year and a half ago, and has taken steps to relieve some of the problems town departments have experienced with the computer. These new procedures, which were initiated two weeks ago, will cost the town about $2000.

The advisors argued that the Keanes, noted computer experts, would be the logical choice to analyze the system. The MMA representative may not be knowledgeable about computers, which troubled some advisory committee members.

Last week selectmen asked the advisory committee for a $1000 budget transfer. They explained that a professional computer expert from the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA) had already looked into the system.

According to Selectmen Chairman Clifford Mitman, "he talked with the departments that use the computer, and he gave us a verbal report. It wasn't good. The hardware is very good state-of-the-art stuff, but the software is pretty bad, almost unuseable. He's willing to give us a written report and make recommendations, but we need to pay. We'll have a document to solve some of the problems with this system. It will cost $1000."

The preliminary study made by the MMA professional was completed free of charge.

The system was purchased in June, 1983 for $87,000 which includes $9,111 worth of software programs.

According to Accountant Signorelli, the only problem, which he admitted is aggravating to town employees, is a delay in the computer's data processing time. Seven terminals are tied into the main computer, one each in the accountant's office, the treasurer-collector's office, the assessor's office, the water department, and three in the school department. SEMASS hike reviewed by town

The Disposal Area Study Committee was scheduled to meet this week to discuss the pending rate increase proposed by SEMASS, the trash-to-energy waste disposal organization the town is about to join.

SEMASS President George Mallin informed town officials last month that because of a mandate handed down by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), there will be an increase in the tipping fees charged to each participating community.

The DEQE has ruled that all resource recovery facilities, such as the Rochester SEMASS plant, install anti-pollution devices known as acid gas scrubbers. Because of the cost of installing the devices and knowledge that this type of ruling might be forthcoming, SEMASS has included a provision within each community's contract, specifying that the cost will be passed onto the SEMASS participants.

In December, it was calculated that the increase would amount to about $5 extra per ton. But Disposal Area Study committee member Donald DeMichele said that calculation is not definite. His guess is that each community will experience a tipping fee hike between $5 and $7 per ton.

Annually, that will mean an extra $20,000 to $28,000 for Cohasset. According to initial talks between Cohasset and SEMASS officials, the town was to be charged $15 per ton of refuse transported to the Rochester facility. At an annual tonnage rate of 4000, Cohasset would be paying $60,000 in tipping fees the first year. That figure will now be inflated by $20,000 to $28,000 the first year of the 20-year contract. After the initial year, the cost is reduced for the town as energy is produced from the disposed waste and revenue is generated.

DeMichele noted that disposal committee members were to meet Wednesday night to discuss whether, with the planned rate hike, SEMASS remains the most viable alternative for Cohasset.

Although he had attempted to contact SEMASS officials about a definite increase figure, DeMichele has been unsuccessful. He expects to know by the end of the week what Cohasset will be charged for the tipping fee, inclusive of the increase.

According to DeMichele, the committee will also ask

Watershed group defines CDM study

By Ann Erskine

The Watershed Area Protection Committee met Tuesday night to discuss the priority of items they want included in the upcoming Camp Dresser and McKee study.

The committee recently hired CDM to do a 10,000 dollar hydrogeolgic study of the entire watershed area, and to define the parameters of the water supply area.

Items discussed at the meeting fell into four categories; definition of the watershed area, evaluation of developmental impact on the area, recommendations for regulation changes in the existing bylaw, and the proposal of a management plan to implement such changes.

Top priority was given to defining the watershed area. This task would be accomplished by drawing up specific maps which would include an overlay of the Watershed Protection District, zoning, two-foot contour, and flood plain and watershed area maps. The committee also hopes to have critical watershed areas defined on zoning and two-foot contour maps.

In evaluating developmental impact on the watershed area, engineers will be asked to define acceptable limits, and assess present conditions, giving the town an idea of how much additional development it can safely allow. Committee member Barbara Kern asked that an item be included to pinpoint potential and existing sources of pollution in the watershed area.

Bylaw changes in sensitive areas would include lot size, subdivision, and the Board of Health regulations.

The committee will ask Camp, Dresser and McKee to provide a well-defined watershed management plan for the town of Cohasset as well as recommendations for neighboring communities which contain parts of the watershed area.

Committee member Tom Cook pointed out that unless those parts of the watershed area which lie outside Cohasset town limits are protected, the water supply remains in danger of being polluted. "We have to know where the sensitive areas are in the other towns," explained Cook. "Yes, it's important in Cohasset, but it's just as important in other towns."

Member Peter Pratt felt that greater priority should be given to defining the means by which bylaw regulations would be enforced.

These recommendations were scheduled for discussion with representatives from Camp, Dresser and McKee Thursday night. The committee hopes to settle contract terms at that time.

Permit fees to be paid for roof project

Architect Frank Bagge has sent letters to the two firms completing the roof projects at the high school and Deer Hill School, requiring them to apply and pay for the necessary building permits.

Building Inspector Edward Poskus informed the school committee and architect Bagge last month that no building permits had been requested nor had been issued for the half-million dollar project. When contacted this week, Poskus said he was unaware that any work had been started since the permits were never requested.

"I haven't been up there to inspect the work yet. They're supposed to write a provision into the contract, requiring the contractor to take out the necessary permits. After they get the permits, I'll go up there and inspect the work," he said.

Repairs to the Deer Hill School roof have been completed and the high school repairs are three-quarters complete.

Poskus told the school committee Dec. 17 that according to the contract totals, $635 in building permit fees is needed for the Deer Hill School, and $1935 for the high school repairs.

Poskus also noted that the school committee could have requested that selectmen waive the building permit fee for the project. But because they never did that, Poskus said the contractor will have to pay the required fees.

Election Offices Nomination

Nomination Papers for the Town Election April 13, 1985, will be available at the Town Clerks Office starting Jan. 17, 1985.

Last day for candidates to take out nomination papers will be Wednesday Feb. 27, 1985 until 5:00 p.m.

All nomination papers shall be submitted to the registrars of voters for certification of the names on or before 5:00 p.m. Friday, March 1, 1985.

Positions that will be available for nomination are as follows: Selectmen - one position for three years; Assessor - one position for three years; Treasurer-Collector - one position to fill unexpired term for two years; School Committee - two positions for three years each; Trustees of Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three positions for three years each, and one position to fill unexpired term for one year; Board of Health - one position for three years; Planning Board - one position for five years; Water Commissioner - one position for three years; Sewer Commissioner - one position for three years; Recreation Commission - one position for five years; Cohasset Housing Authority - one position open for five years and one position to fill unexpired term for four years.

At least 50 signatures are needed for each candidate.

Pay hike for secretary

Advisors compromised with selectmen's request, and supported a higher salary for the next executive secretary. Their recommended total however, was $2000 less than what selectmen requested last Thursday night.

Selectmen Clifford Mitman and Mary Jane McArthur appeared before the advisors Thursday night to request their support of a pay hike. No additional monies would have to be transferred now, they explained, because of the four-month vacancy in that office which has left a surplus in the salary account.

What they requested from the advisory committee was support for a $5000 pay increase for the next prospective executive secretary. Once fiscal 1986 arrives, the extra monies would have to be appropriated.

Mitman explained the difficulty the board has experienced this year in its attempt to hire a replacement for former secertary Mark Lanza. Although they 38 applicants, their first choice for the position declined the job offer, along with their second choice. The third finalist was not offered the job, Mitman said.

The pay increase, he added, would hopefully attract better qualified and more experienced candidates for the Cohasset position. Many of the 38 applicants were underqualified, Mitman said.

The selectmen have begun the search again and will be advertising for an executive secretary.

Advisor James Lagrotteria agreed the salary should be increased, but suggested that in addition to the benefits such as pension and insurance, a $28,000 salary would equal out to $30,000. He also noted that other department heads, who do not work under the authority of the executive secretary, have been in their offices for several years and are receiving salaries comparable to $30,000.

Advisory member William Lean disagreed with the suggestion that the committee should be involved in recommending or supporting salary schedules.

The committee voted 5-1 to support a salary of $28,000 for the executive secretary.

Recycling Center monitoring

The Cohasset Board of Health reminds townspeople of the recycling activities at the Cedar Street Landfill. Glass, aluminum and newspapers should all be recycled.

Spearation of these articles from trash extends the life of the landfill and provides an additional sum of money to the town. Cooperation by townspeople in these efforts has been most helpful.

The recycling monitor, Mr. Leighton, will be resigning his position this month. The Board of Health is looking for someone to take his place. The job is paid, part-time, 19.50 hours weekly, with the largest portion of hours during the weekends which is the busiest operational time at the landfill.

The monitor works only at the recycling center and reports to the Recycling Committee and the Board of Health. If you are interested in the position, please contact the Board of Health offices at 383-1664.

There was an error in the Dec. 22, 1984 issue regarding operating hours at the landfill. The current operational hours of the landfill are every day from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 a.m. with the exception of Mondays and Wednesdays when it is closed.

Lack of respect

In a letter addressed to the chairman of the Cohasset Planning Board, 100 Pond Street resident Joan Belanger complained about the lack of respect that board displayed during a recent public hearing with Pond Street developer Frederick Thayer.

Selectmen held that hearing to determine whether the town is responsible for plowing and sanding the main road leading to the 100 Pond Street development. The planning board had charged that during their site review of the project, the developer, Mr. Thayer, had accepted that responsibility.

"I was appalled at the lack of respect and consideration shown Mr. Thayer, who appeared to be on trial. I thought it was a thoroughly unprofessional way to conduct town business and was made to feel that the Planning Board of the town of Cohasset welcomed additional tax revenue, but would rather new residents stayed in their old locations and mailed it in," Belanger wrote.

In addition she stated, "the members of the Board of Selectmen seem to be reasonable people who can view a subject dispassionately and make a judgement without letting peronsal animosity become involved."

Selectmen decided at the Dec. 10 hearing that the town should be responsible for plowing the road, since there was no formal written document stating it would be under the authority of the developer.

Zoning Board Reviews Seawall

At their meeting Jan. 3, the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals considered the request of Mrs. Dorothy Remick to replace the existing stone seawall in front of her home at 59 Joy Place.

Speaking for Mrs. Remick were her husband Raymond Remick and consulting engineer Richard Merriken.

According to Mr. Merriken, the existing wall is two-to-three-feet high and in poor condition, having been eroded by tidal flow. The new wall is being requested for safety reasons. Mrs. Remick's proposal also includes plans to backhoe earth behind the new wall in order to restore land lost to tidal flood.

Mrs. Jeanne Gormley of 44 Beach St. suggested that all proposals for tidal areas include a datum base, to define the contours of the land. She requested such a requirement be included in any zoning bylaw changes. Mr. Merriken pointed out that the plans for 59 Joy Place include a datum base.

The issue was taken under advisement.

Also discussed at the meeting was the request of harbormaster Harry Ritter to use his home as a multi-family rather than a single-family residence. The hearing was opened and will be continued Thursday Feb. 7. Opinions for and against the proposal will be heard on that date.

Advisors review computer problems

a terminal within the town clerk's office.

According to Signorelli, the delays are experienced when two terminals are attempting to process data into the integrated financial accounting system at the same time. Because the departments were experiencing problems with the system, Signorelli assigned specific days for certain departments to use that accounting system.

In the meantime, he contacted a representative of the Digital Corp., the firm which manufactures the hardware. They said a portion of the problem could be solved by adding a second disk drive to the main computer. Two weeks ago, on a three-month loan basis, Digital installed a second disk drive along with two additional megabites, that portion of the computer where data is stored. For the cost of the installation ($1338) and a small monthly maintenance fee ($193 per month), the memory capability of the computer has been tripled, Signorelli said, along with the ability to process additional data.

The accountant said this was a fair price, considering installation took two men about six hours. If the town does not wish to purchase the additional hardware, there will be an additional $386 fee.

"Honestly, until the system has been de-bugged, I don't know if this will totally cure the problem. We'll know shortly whether adding the equipment has cured the problem," he noted.

The hardware for the town's computer system was purchased from Digital Corp. The software programs were purchased from Data National, a firm, selectmen told advisors last week, which did not have a track record in the software business.

At the advisory committee meeting last week, Mitman said the town had no recourse to Data National, "beause there's a problem sorting out how much is due to hardware or the software or how much is due to use. We can't sort out where all the problems are."

Water Department Supt. Ben Curley, in a letter addressed to selectmen two weeks ago, stated his disastisfaction with the Data National system.

He wrote, "the present system is more complicated, time consuming, and frustrating than the manual system used in the early days of the department. We favor an expeditious computer system, but this is not it."

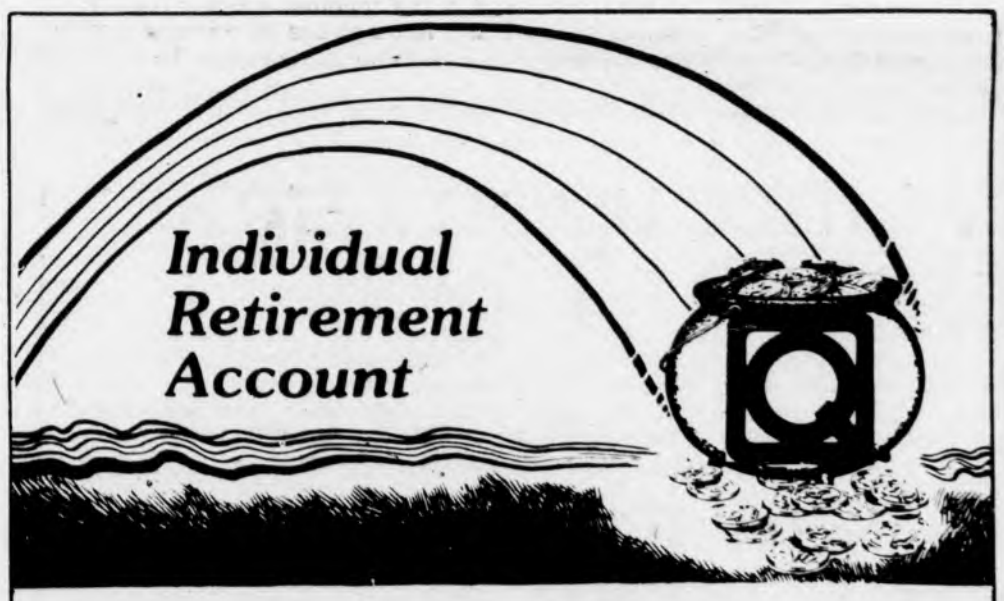
Curley told selectmen that the processed data is "full of extensive errors," which takes time to correct and reprogram. Curley added the department has no confidence in the system, and requested a guarantee that the situation be resolved. If the problems are not resolved, he added, the Water Department will consider purchasing a personal computer and printer adequate for the processing of water bills.

Signorelli, who was part of a committee to develop the scope of services for a municipal computer system in Cohasset, said he is pleased with the current system.

"It's been quite an experience, but I'm pleased. We have all our accounting up to date. Once we solve the problem of the delay in processing, I think we'll have a great system. The delays have been aggravating, waiting for the printout of data. But so far, these additions to the computer have worked and I don't expect any further troubles," he added.

Financial Aid Awareness Month

Representative Mary Jeannette Murray announced, "The Massachusetts Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (MASFAA) will have its 1985 Financial Aid Awareness Month toll-free telephone counseling service for a four week period."



"The eighth annual hot-line service will operate weeknights, from 5 to 9 p.m., Jan. 15 to Feb. 15, 1985. The Massachusetts toll-free student financial aid hot-line number is: 1-800-325-2523," Mary Jeanette continued.

In the past the hot-line ran throughout the month of Jan. Beginning the service later assists parents and students in completing applications when family financial data is more readily available.

"Without up-to-date and timely information, the financial aid process can be confusing," said Representative Murray. This is a part of an effort to ensure that Massachusetts residents in need have the opportunity to learn how to apply for all the student financial aid that is available to them," added Mary Jeanette.

School board looks into more budget cuts

The school budget is approaching its target authorized by the advisory committee, but further reductions must be made.

As of this week, the school budget totals $4,208,873, which is $17,358 off the advisory committee's recommended mark. To get to that new total, school administrators sliced $85,740 from the budget which was reviewed two weeks ago.

The school budget last year was approved at a total of $4,065,335. The advisory committee authorized a budget increase of $126,000 for fiscal year 1986. Before this week's latest budget review, the school department was proposing a budget that was $103,278 greater than the advisory committee's authorized increase.

Although the school committee is getting closer to the advisory committee's goal, that total amount does not include negotiated salary increases.

To get to this point, two large budget requests were separated from the school budget and will be placed on the annual town meeting warrant as capital budget items. The first school-sponsored warrant article will request approximately $30,000 for an electrical lighting board and related lighting fixtures for the high school auditorium. The second article will request about $13,000 for the purchase of a used dump truck for the daily dump runs made from the three schools.

The truck may be used in conjunction with a compacter which is being stored and not in use at the Deer Hill School. Currently the school department has a 14 year-old truck which is quickly disintegrating, according to Supt. Eugene Crowell. Trips are made daily from each of the schools to the dump. A dump truck, he explained, would be capable of utilizing the compacter and would thus require less trips to the town landfill.

Supt. Crowell and Asst. Supt. Stephen Hart have reviewed the budget with school administrators and have made further reductions from the original budget proposal.

Although there were many cuts made to the budget, there were a few "add-backs" which somewhat offset the total. The greatest additions to the proposed budget were in the custodian salary accounts. The custodian contract has been finalized and the salary figures now represent a true amount. That budget increased by $1768 at the Osgood School, $1519 at the Deer Hill and $5063 at the high school.

Among the reductions made this week to the proposed budget was $100 from the high school professional materials account; $10,000 from the athletic account because of the $10,000 which will be taken from the athletic revolving account; $5200 from the heating account; $1000 from the carpentry account at the high school; $500 from the Osgood masonry account; $200 from the Deer Hill roof account, for those sections not recently repaired; $12,000 from the Unemployment Insurance account; $2000 from maintenance at Deer Hill; $1800 from the acquisition of equipment at Deer Hill.

Also, $1000 from the acquisition of math equipment at the high school; $1500 from the acquisition of science equipment at the high school;$1000 from the the acquisition of business education equipment; $1520 from the Special Education account which was to be used for the purchase of a computer; $486 from the high school science replacement of equipment and $200 each from the Industrial Arts and Home Economics replacement of equipment accounts.

The latest budget total of $4,208,873 does not include a proposal to add a health education/crisis intervention counselor at the elementary schools. That is a proposal made by the health education coordinator which is being studied by the school committee.

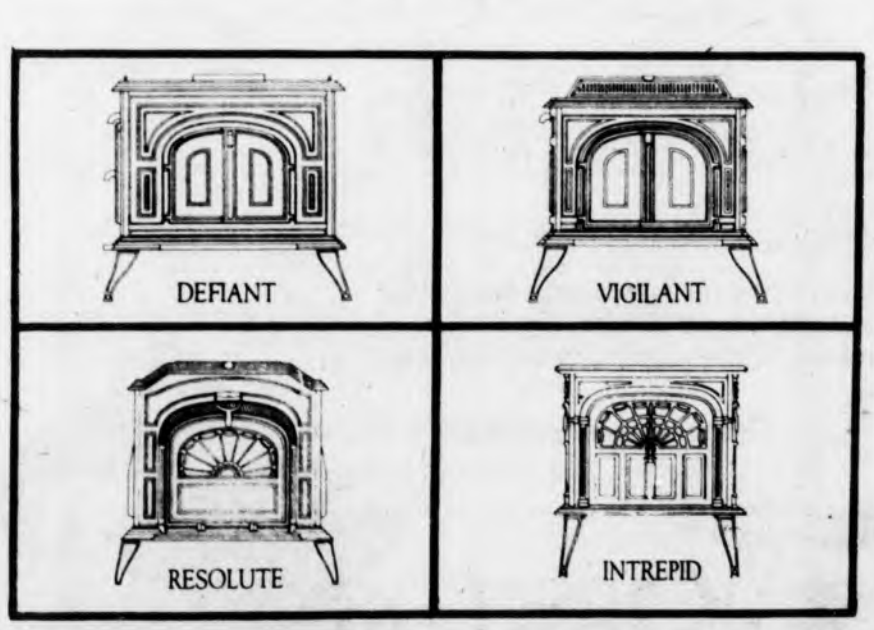
ELBA



Virgil called Elba "the generous island." It was Napolean's home prior to his famous "100 days." For travelers in search of tranquility rather than frenzy, it has replaced Capri as the island of choice. Simple, primitive and unspoiled, Elba is an island of glorious mountains, shimmering olive-toned landscape and breathtaking beaches. It also has but eight small towns, a dozen small villages and a scattering of hamlets on this 30 mile home of 37,000 people. Health addicts can partake of the therapeutic mud baths at the Terme of San Giovanni. Advisors review FY 86 budgets

The first budget for fiscal 1986 was approved last Thursday night by the advisory committee.

The Building Inspector's budget was approved at a recommended total of $42,995, a five percent increase over last year's amount.

The salary for Edward Poskus, who was appointed building inspector last spring, will be $24,596 next year. He began his duties several months ago at a salary level of $23,000.

A total of $36,640 was approved by the committee for the personal services account. That amount includes $650 for temporary employee salaries, to be expended principally when the inspector or the office secretary is on vacation.

The remaining $11,394 was approved for clerical staff salaries.

The general services account, which includes monies for telephone, office supplies, postage, mileage and stationery, was approved at a total of $6335. That amount is $600 less than last year's total.

At the conclusion of Thursday night's budget review, advisors agreed to a four to five percent cap on all town department budget increases.

The advisory committee reviewed but took no action on the proposed fiscal 1986 sewer department budget which is 16 percent higher than last year's appropriations.

Wages in the department, for the plant superintendent, a fulltime assistant and part-time operator, increased from $55,930 last year, to a requested $63,683 for next year. That amount includes a request to make the part-time position fulltime, and salary step increases for the three sewer plant employees and the part-time clerical help.

Advisors were not convinced of the need for another fulltime position at the sewer plant, especially when it will be converted sometime to a pumping station. "What are we going to do with all these bodies when it becomes a pumping station?" advisory member James Lagrotteria asked.

Committee members agreed that Sewer Plant Superintendent Manual Salvador should appear before the board again Thursday night, along with Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis, to discuss the budget requests.

Among the other items the advisors want to review with the sewer department representatives, is a proposed $6000 increase in the general expenses account of their budget. The department has requested $53,435 for general expenses next year, compared to $47,712 appropriated this year.

Among the increases requested within that account is a $3000 increase in contract services, a $900 jump in telephone expenditures, and increases in the office supplies and postage accounts.

The advisory committee also reviewed the proposed Dog Control budget, but will reconsider the requests next week.

The total proposed budget is $5000, including a salary increase to $3000, a $300 repair and maintenance account, and a $300 equipment replacement account. In addition, there is a request for a $500 portable radio for the dog officer's van.

Discussion of crisis counselor

Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill presented his proposal to the school committee Monday night to hire an elementary school health educator/crisis intervention counselor.

The proposal for the $18,000 staff position has not been added into the school budget for fiscal 1986. The school committee has yet to decide whether the position will be included in next year's budget.

According to Gill, who for the past four years has headed the K-12 health education program, a counselor and additional health educator coordinator is needed in the elementary grades.

Dealing with suicide, pregnancies, drug and family problems are situations Gill confronts weekly at the high school. But at the elementary schools, he explained, the youngsters are unable to verbalize traumatic situations.

This counselor would be used at certain times within the classrooms, assisting the classroom teacher with special health education curriculum. Gill noted that some elementary teachers do not have the time, nor the expertise to teach a quality health education program.

The counselor would also be in the Deer Hill and Osgood schools to assist students identified by parents or staff members as in need of counseling. He could assist the student within the school, or refer the student to an outside counseling agency.

School Committee Chairman Joseph Nedrow asked whether it would be a more viable route for the schools to provide additional in-service health education training for the classroom instructors. Gill noted that the teachers carry a tremendous workload now. With his experience and expertise, this new staff member would act as a coordinator, developing new and better health programs for the students.

School committee briefs

Sabbatical leave reviewed

The school committee Monday night reviewed a request by kindergarten teacher Christine Collins for a year's sabbatical. Collins is currently applying to Boston-area universities for entrance to a Master's degree program in elementary curriculum.

Collins, who Supt. Eugene Crowell praised as one of the most dedicated, exceptional teachers and a leader in the community and among her peers, recommended that the committee approve the request. The committee took the request under advisement until next Monday when Collins will specifically outline what type of Master's program she is seeking.

This will be Collins' second sabbatical in her 14 years in the Cohasset school system. She was granted a one-year's leave while she obtained a Master's degree in administration, staff development and evaluation. Next year, she explained, she would like to pursue an education in curriculum development, hopefully with a work component in addition to her academic studies.

Crowell explained that within the teachers' contract, there is a provision denying two sabbaticals in one school year. Collins' first leave was granted in the 1977-1978 school year.

The superintendent also noted that with the addition of a replacement next year, together with Collins' half-salary payment, it will cost about $2000 to the school department to grant the sabbatical.

In tribute

The school committee held a moment of silence in memory of Carol Wallace, a former special needs instructional aide at the Osgood School.

Asst. Supt. Stephen Hart noted that Carol died the day after Christmas. He described her as "truly inspirational to all the teachers and students" at the school.

Budget review notes

During their review of the proposed FY 86 budget, school committee members noted that there are a few large increases over which they hold little control.

The budget for residential care for special needs students rose this year from $16,000 in FY 85 to $44,500 in FY 86. That is because one other student will be attending residential facilities. The state reimburses the town 60 percent of the total budget cost.

Also, the maintenance and operation of the school buses expanded from $65,410 this year, to a projected $110,000 next year. That amount is needed, Supt. Eugene Crowell stated, to maintain the aging fleet of buses the town owns. It remains less expensive at this time for Cohasset to own the vehicles, rather than contracting for the service.

Supt. Crowell predicted that it would currently cost Cohasset about $30,000 more a year to lease school buses.

Band class scheduling

Supt. Eugene Crowell told the school committee this week that a replacement for resigning band instructor Jeff Dodge will be recommended at next week's meeting.

There are currently two finalists for the position, he added, both of whom are willing to instruct band during an eighth period or as an afterschool activity.

Two weeks ago, the committee discussed the continuing problem of scheduling conflicts with band students, and attempted to develop ways in which it could be avoided. Double periods, or afterschool schedules have been reviewed as possible alternatives.

Monday night, several parents questioned whether the band must be relegated to an afterschool activity, in competition with athletic programs. Many parents felt that band students would be penalized if the class was held afterschool.

Crowell said any changes in the band schedule will occur next year, and not the second half of this school year.

Crisis counselor

Committee member Diana Kornet said although on one hand she believes in the need for immediate intervention in the elementary grades, on the other hand, she does not support the school taking over responsibility that properly belongs in the home.

Gill answered that nothing is more basic to education than a quality health program. "How can a student learn if he or she is not adjusting to the classroom?" he asked the committee members.

Director of Special Education Stephen Hart warned that this position would have to be well-defined so it would not interfere with the responsibilities of the Special Education department. A well-defined position would result in greater assistance to the students, and more referrals made for children in need for therapy, he added.

Dog obedience classes

The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer three levels of instruction for dog obedience classes, to be taught by Ms. Laurie Ann Clevland. All classes will be held at the G.A.R. Hall in Scituate, and will begin Sunday, Jan. 13. Beginner training classes will be held at 7 p.m.

The purpose of these classes will be to teach novice pet owners basic obedience and responsible pet ownership. Subjects to be covered are proper use of voice, corrections, stay commands, getting the dog to come, heel, etc. Helpful hints on dog ownership and responsibility will also be included.

The obedience will include those exercises beneficial to the pet onwer as well as those thinking about eventually showing their dogs in obedience.

An intermediate/advanced class will be held at 8 p.m. This class is designed for dogs that have had some prior basic training or have completed the Recreation Dept. beginner class.

For the above classes, owners are required to have their dogs equipped with a humane choke chain. The proper size of the chain is determined by measuring the dog's neck and adding four inches. Absolutely no spike collars will be allowed!

It is also strongly suggested that handlers wear comfortable shoes and clothes for these sessions.

For all classes: The fee is $17 per dog for the eight-week, one-hour program. Dogs should be a minimum of three months of age, and there is no limit on maximum age. To register, please call the Recreation Department office at 383-6791. Classes will be limited in size.

Boys basketball keeps winning

The Skippers remain undefeated at 7-0 with a convincing 84-59 win over Norwell last week. Tony Bogarty led the way with 35 points and Dave McDonald set a school record with 11 steals in the third quarter.

Running with precision, the Skippers outscored Norwell 31-11 in the third quarter to increase a 39-31 halftime lead to 70-42.

Forward Bryan Edward added 17 points and pulled down 12 rebounds.

The Cohasset-Scituate game scheduled for Tuesday was postponed until Wednesday, Jan. 9.

☐Speaking of returning, Bruce and Clair Williams made their annual pilgrimage with their children, Ian and Alison, to visit friends and relatives in Cohasset. They did catch part of the snowstorm as they traveled, but arriving to 72° Cohasset weather eased the pain of the trip considerably.

☐Jack and Mike MacNeill made it to the Christmas Tournament, and had a chance to visit with many old buddies. They both look great and report that all is well with school, and family.

☐Rich Evans and John Drago were among the grads that attended a hockey game. . .must have seemed strange for John to see #10 out there and not be the player wearing it. Rich has had a year to get used to it, plus is so busy with college hockey he barely has time to think straight.

☐Will all those that didn't go to the Cotton Bowl please raise their hands? Seems that was the place to be this year, as well as the Christmas present that topped everyone's gift list. As someone said, if you don't have tickets to the game, what is the point!

☐Congratulations to two recent Fisher Junior College graduates. Gretchen M. Lincoln and Deborah B. Protulis, both of whom earned Medical Assisting Certificates.

☐ With the New Year upon us, there is a fund-raiser that everyone should be made aware of. There is a group of six special ed students who are learning how to ice skate, both up at Winter Gardens and (hopefully, if it ever freezes) the Common. The hockey team is helping them learn, and they report that the kids love it. The thing the skaters are lacking are skates . . . if you have a pair of skates, or a dollar to donate towards the purchase of a pair, call Clark Chatterton at 383-6103 or 383-0560.

☐ It certainly is a treat to pick up a "major" daily paper like the Globe and see our basketball team making the headlines . . . as one gentleman who has kept up with Cohasset High sports for many years said, "Remember when we had to search the papers through and through for a box score?"

☐ Best of luck to Eileen Mullaney as she embarks on the adventure that everyone read about in last week's Mariner. Her trip to Ethiopia will be one super effort, and we will all be thinking about it . . .

☐ If it seems like a dull 1985 already, think about attending the Village Fair Supper. It is to be held Saturday at St. Stephen's Church. It is touted as a feast of Greek delicacies from roast lamb to baklava. Tickets are $10 and may be purchased from Marilyn Fessler, Lee Jenkins, Barbara Hilsop, Linda Summers, Margaret Phelps, Kathy Brennock, Ginnie Nast or Mary Sofis. The dinner sounds super, and the timing is great. Don't miss it.

☐ Among those who had a fabulous time in Dallas were the O'Connor family. The game was super!

☐ Karen Froio and Sara just returned from a two week stay in Florida, where they visited their "boss" Lokie. They are all like one big family, and a grand time was had by all. The weather couldn't have been better, and they probably even had a chance to make plans for this year's opening of J.J.'s. Let us hope that it is an early one, meaning a delightful spring for all.

☐ Amanda Sweeney and her Mom had a grand trip recently, and they are still taking about how much fun it was.

☐ I was talking to Dan Curran (of Church Street) recently, and he told me how grand it was to be in the news. It seems that he is sometimes mixed up with Dan Curran (of the high school sports fame), and gets words of congratulations. He said it reminded him of the days gone by . . .

☐ Don O'Neill scored two goals against former teammate Rich Evans in a recent hockey game. Must be hard to play against a former teammate but at least you know the moves . . .

☐ Have been asked to remind you that it is necessary to keep your path shoveled for our mailmen. It is hard enough to deliver the mail at this time of year, but a snowy path makes it slippery, and almost impossible to navigate. Let's do it for them.

☐ I happened to be downtown last week when the alarm was sounded at the Red Lion Inn. It seemed a matter of seconds from the time the alarm went off until the engines arrived, I couldn't believe how fast they were in getting there. Fortunately there was no problem, but it is nice to be reminded what a good job our department does and how quickly they respond to our calls.

☐ Please, please, please send in your news. It is what it takes to keep "Around Town" going! With all of the vacations and students that were home for same, news should be abundant. Call or write to me.

Pin adjustment keeps Satuit Bowlaway rolling

By Mike Berger

"'Hi Neighbor.'"

That's a familiar greeting from Satuit Bowlaway owner Don Dwyer who has greeted bowlers from Hingham to Marshfield as he has operated the Cole Parkway bowling alley in Scituate since 1953.

Since the arrival of cable television, the Satuit Bowlaway has taken on a new look with new tournaments, new prizes and competition.

Day after day, bowling team members climb the stairs to the Bowlaway, forget the problems of the everyday world and have some fun and that's exactly why Dwyer has owned the Bowlaway for over 30 years.

Deep down in his heart he believes that bowling has and always will be fun and enjoyable to all sexes and bowlers of all ages. With that in mind, Dwyer revealed the key to his success as a bowling entrepreneur is a little psychological secret.

People like good bowling scores and fat averages. It makes them feel like they have accomplished something.

Dwyer checked the "big ball" bowling alleys and found they were making money because more people went bowling daily. "I thought for a minute that the biggest thing in candlepin bowling is to get a good score, over a 100."

So Dwyer, through automation, moved the back pins four inches closer to the head pin. The average bowler couldn't tell the difference but now the bowling ball's impact had more play and the result was more pins falling - thus bigger scores.

Saturday bowlers Dorothy Zinke and Ruth Cochran bid each other good luck. (Rose Cundari photo)

"The scores suddenly were 20 percent better and this led to more business," Dwyer said.

In 1952, based on a 100 man league, 45 percent of those 100 bowlers hit the pins for over 100 point score. The turnover rate was 35 percent.

Now, 84 men are now over a 100 average and there's a waiting list to enter a league.

Ever wonder why Dwyer calls the Bowlaway the "Home of Champions?"

That's because three world champion bowlers have climbed the Bowlaway stairs - Don Dwyer and Larry and Harold Jenkins.

Playing mostly in New England, these three men bowled day after day to earn the championship. Manager Bob Jenkins also has the three string record of 501 on the South Shore.

With good leadership and skill behind him and his manager, Dwyer feels that good working machines, a friendly environment and money jackpot shots will still keep the interested sports fans climbing the Bowlaway stairs.

The Scituate bowling company began in 1939 in what is now the downstairs hardware store or Scituate Supply Company. In 1944 the 10-alley facility moved upstairs.

The Bowlaway was for sale in 1953 and Dwyer, working as a worker setting up the pins, decided to purchase it.

"I really didn't have a dime and I just got married. When we started it was tough. There were only four or five leagues.

"But I think what really got it going were the Norwell firemen and Marshfield people who bowled Monday night. They told their friends and their wives and then we started the women's leagues and then we started programs for kids."

In the 1950s 50 to 100 men bowled in all the leagues. Now 100 men make up one league.

Dwyer credits special needs children as helping his business grow. "The schools really couldn't pay for it but to me I could see the kids' eyes and know that knocking the pins down really built their confidence up. The response the from schools paid off as more and more kids and their parents came.

"From there Cushing Hall (former home for troubled youth) came and then we got people from the churches," said Dwyer.

In the 1940s it cost 25 cents per string. A weekend special included free shoes. Now it costs 90 cents per string and 40 cents for shoes. The biggest expenses are electric light, machine and maintenance costs.

Dwyer says youth loitering is not a problem at the Bowlaway because right from the beginning the rules of behavior are set and children are expected to obey them. And for the most part there are no problems. In fact many children volunteer to help Dwyer bring in soda or packages.

"Have fun and good will, those are the main messages of the Bowlaway," Dwyer said.

Good work award

Well, we've survived our first snow storm of the new year. And we think we did it in grand style.

Let's give credit where credit is due, and extend our hearty thanks and congratulations to the Cohasset Highway Department.

By late morning, most of the roads in Cohasset were not only plowed and sanded, they were clear of snow. Driving along Cohasset roads was a distinct pleasure Tuesday morning (once we shoveled ourselves out of the driveway).

The Mariner award for the Best Effort in Producing Safe and Clear Streets during the Year's First Snowstorm is proudly bestowed upon the Cohasset Highway Department.

During our travels to neighboring towns, we found the streets treacherous, seemingly untouched by a plow.

Our next door neighbor Scituate, where streets looked as if they were located in downtown Siberia, mustn't have notified its highway department about the snowstorm. Main roads in that town were covered with snow, layered upon a covering of ice. By Wednesday, many of the same roads remained in that condition deplorable.

Much as we hate to be haughty, we must. Therefore, we defer upon our neighbor Scituate, the Mariner's ignominous Where the Heck was that Blade on the Plow that went past my Street award.

Marshfield, the location of our main office, found itself in much the same situation. The roads were slippery with a new coating of powder snow, while underneath lay of sheet of ice.

We can't understand, and certainly the residents of these towns should not be made to do so, why we must pay exorbitant amounts for minimal results. Each year the highway departments in every town ask for some type of budget increase, be it large or small.

Each superintendent moans about the lack of proper equipment, manpower and money to do an adequate job of plowing and sanding.

If the situation exists everywhere, why did Cohasset do such a superior job this week?

Let's continue this tradition Cohasset, and show the surrounding communities what a superior department and superintendent we have. Let's have a winter free from accidents caused by poor road conditions.

There's one born-again every minute

By Claire McDonough

Dear Ann Landers:

Remember me, Ann? I wrote to you some time ago and told you I was a genuine, 24 karat sucker for every con that comes down the pike.

I'm the one who falls for the salt-in-the-sugar bowl, the imitation doggie mistakes, the dribble glass, the flower that squirts water in your face, the whole works.

I'm the one who's so desperate to lose weight she answers ads in the National Enguirer for Voodoo priests to perform unspeakable rites with grasshoppers which will make her slender.

I'm the one who told you she sent away for what she coyly called the "Roaring Twenties" because the ad said it cost $20 and you put it in your bathtub and sat in it for 20 minutes, and you would lose 20 pounds. They said it would be a pleasurable experience.

Ann, it was pirranahs. Pleasurable for them, maybe.

You were very kind, Ann, and I feel your advice has had a major impact on my life.

You told me you had some stock you wanted to sell me.

I realized you were being sarcastic, and I've been much more discriminating ever since.

I didn't answer the ad that said I could make big money writing (working for the Mariner shattered that illusion). I didn't buy a Foot Pain Reliever guaranteed to roll the aches and pains out of my feet. (Ann, a year ago I would have bought that even if my feet didn't hurt).

I didn't send away for a book on how to "Make 100 Dollars in Real Estate," or the one titled, "Bonzai Your Pet."

Ann, for me this is real improvement.

When I got a chain letter last week, I threw it away. I didn't believe it would being me $8 million if I mailed it to fifteen of my friends, and I ignored the threat that I would (a) lose my job or (b) die if I didn't comply with their instructions.

Progress, huh?

And that's not all, Ann. I walked right by some young people who were standing outside the subway collecting money in cans that begged, "Help Stamp Out Osmosis."

Walked right by them, and never gave a thought to all those innocent victims of that dread process.

I'm not bald, Ann, but a year ago I would have bought Miracle Hair Restorer, guaranteed to grow hair on a billiard ball. Not any more.

Last week, Ann, I laughed when I read the Sunday paper. Actually laughed. There was an ad for a product that would let you eat all you want and never gain a pound. As a matter of fact, it stated that you would actually lose several pounds a day until you made Jane Fonda look obese. There were before and after pictures, too. A lovely, slim young lady was frolicking in a swimming pool, laughingly displaying the tent sized shorts she had previously worn.

The manufacturers even tried to impress you with their responsibility. They said they wouldn't sell you the product unless you agreed not to use too much of it. They said you might get too thin, and give them a bad name.

I really laughed at that part, Ann.

I laughed even harder at the part that said this product blocked the food you ate, so it couldn't get to your body, and your body would have to start using up all the food it had stored as ugly fat.

Isn't that crazy? I mean, how would you get the vitamins and minerals and everything else you need to survive? How could you be sure your body would only use up ugly fat, and not something you really need.

Who do they think they're deceiving, anyway?

So, Ann, do you think I should send for the ten day trial sample or the large economy size?

YMCA proposed for Hull

The Hull Planning Board discussed plans for a proposed regional YMCA to be located in the vacant Damon School. The facility would be used by residents of Hull, Cohasset and Hingham.

Cohasset Recreation Director Jack Worley said he has not heard any details of the plan, but added depending on the type of facility, it could be a boon for residents here.

"At this point, I don't know too much about it. It's probably a better idea for Hull than any of the surrounding towns," he noted. "But a YMCA usually can offer programs that a town's recreation program can not, depending on the facility."

Worley said if the proposed building housed an indoor pool and ballcourts, then it would be a substantial addition to the town's recreational offerings.

"If it's to be a full facility, then it would definitely be a plus to the surrounding towns," Worley added.

Open burning season

Open burning in the Town of Cohasset will be permitted from January 15 through May 1 inclusive. Permission to conduct burning may be obtained by calling Fire Headquarters at 383-0260 on the day burning is to be conducted.

Residents are reminded of permit conditons which are as follows:

1) Burning of grass, hay, leaves, and stumps is prohibited.

2) Permit hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. All fires are to be extinguished by 4 p.m.

3) All burning must be conducted at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling.

4) Open burning must be conducted without causing a nuisance.

Determination as to whether burning will be conducted on any given day is made by the Fire Department. Dry or windy weather conditions may suspend permit issuance.

Questions regarding Open Burning may be answered by calling the Cohasset Fire Department at 383-0260.

Health board letter

Health Agent Joseph Godzik expressed the Board of Health's support of a recommendation made by former Executive Secretary Mark Lanza to keep GSA surplus land in Hingham from being sold to private developers.

In a letter to the selectmen this week, Godzik stated the health board agrees with Lanza's recommendation to support the Department of Environmental Management (DEM) in their effort to keep the 135 acres of surplus GSA land in Hingham from being offered to private parties.

"The Board of Health is concerned about the potential sale to private parties because the land may be in the Lily Pond Watershed Area or the recharge area for Lily Pond," he wrote.

The Board of Health posed several questions they felt the selectmen should have answered, including: is any of the 135 acres for sale located in Cohasset? and is there a notification process for the towns in the event the land is put up for sale?

The board members also asked selectmen if a course of action for the town had been proposed in the event the land is put up for sale on the open market.

Senior citizens news

The Cohasset Sixty Plus Club Board of Directors has scheduled the following social programs for the first three months of the New Year.

Thursday, Jan. 17 at Trueblood Hall, there will be luncheon at noon. A short but important business meeting will follow. At 1p.m., there will be bingo games, with special prizes.

Thursday, Feb. 21, a Valentine card and bingo party is scheduled.

Thursday, March 21, there will be a penny sale. All members are requested to make a donation.

There will be two Keep Well Clinics in January; Thursday the 17th from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Unitarian Parish House, and Harbor View Hall, 60 Elm St., Thursday Jan. 24, from 10 a.m. to noon.

Every Tuesday is the special luncheon for all Senior Citizens at Trueblood Hall at noon.

Crossen named to veteran post

Administrator of Veterans Affairs Harry N. Walters has named Ralph M. Crossen as special assistant for Veterans Service Organization Coordination. Crossen is the son of Mrs. Alba Crossen of Flintlock Ridge Road in Cohasset.

Crossen's primary responsibilities will be to insure communication and coordination between the Veterans Administration and the major veterans organizations in mutual efforts to provide service and benefits to those who served the nation's Armed Forces.

A Marine combat veteran of the Vietnam War, Crossen has been a staff assistant to the administrator since 1982, specializing in handling veteran-related problems that couldn't be resolved through normal agency channels.

Crossen, 37, started with the VA in 1979 as a Veterans contact representative in the Washington, D.C. regional office. In 1981, he became a staff assistant to the associate deputy administrator of the VA for Congressional and Public Affairs.

He served in the Marine Corps from 1965 to 1969, two of those years in Vietnam. He then went on to earn a B.A. degree from St. Anselm's College, Manchester, N.H., and is currently working towards a masters degree in public administration at George Washington University in Washington, D.C.

Oil Spill Response Plan

A newly-developed Massachusetts Oil Spill Local Response Plan will be the topic of discussion at a meeting to be held at Marshfield Town Hall, Wednesday, Jan. 16 at 10 a.m. The meeting is sponsored by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC), the area's regional planning agency.

The plan, developed by the MACP for the Massachusetts Coastal Zone Management Program, defines the roles and responsibilities of the South Shore coastal municipalities from Hingham to Plymouth, inclusive. A similar plan was previously adopted for Cape Cod.

Copies of the plan will be distributed to the chief elected official and the designated local oil spill coordinator for each of the communities covered by the plan. Local, state, and federal oil spill officials will introduce the plan at the meeting and answer any questions about its implementation during a two-hour briefing session.

Golden selected committee chairman

It's been a busy week for newly inducted State Sen. Bill Golden as he is the chairman of the Counties Committee in the Senate and also a co-sponsor of rules reform legislation.

Golden, chosen by Senate President William Bulger, will oversee legislation which will determine the self rule of county government.

Jan. 2, the first day of the 1985 legislation session, eight Democratic senators including Golden formed a Senate rules reform caucus.

Golden said the enactment of the McGovern Report recommendations is an important first step towards meaningful rules reform in the state Senate. "With the election of myself and other Senators committed to rules reform, I believe that we now have the votes to ensure passage of the entire report."

The second goal of the caucus will be to study proposed rules changes and to develop a comprehensive program of further rules reform and bring it before the Senate by early 1986 by the latest.

The program will involve an examination of the effect of rules reform on the Massachusetts House of Representatives and a comparison of Massachusetts legislative rules with rules of other state legislative bodies.

"The Rules Reform process should not end with the enactment of the McGovern Report. The caucus will provide a much needed mechanism to consider the need for additional reforms to increase the accountability and personal contrtibution of each senator," Golden said.

"Through this mechanism, each existing rule can be carefully reviewed and each proposed reform fully deliberated on its merits. The existing rules have withstood the test of time and they should not be abandoned without good cause and due consideration of the proposed alternatives.

"We have to be careful we don't throw the baby out with the bath water," Golden said.

Caucus meetings and hearing will be publicized and open to the public. The first caucus meeting will be held in mid-January and the first agenda item will be to elect officers.

Joining Golden in the caucus are Sens. Salvatore Albano, Carol Amick, George Bachrach, Jack Backman, Paul Harold, John Houston and Richard Kraus.

Gov. Michael Dukakis is greeted by Bill Golden at a Jan. 2 statehouse reception. Golden's daughter Bethany is in background.

'Magic Ski Tuning' is start for local entrepeneur

Inside the barn behind his South Main Street home, Mike Suhrbier can be found weekday afternoons. This 14 year-old is not pursuing any idle activity. He's at work.

Mike is busy attending to a business he began two years ago when he was in fourth grade. It has provided him with enough income to supplement his increasing interest in ski racing, and this Christmas, according to his mother Robin, "we all received really nice gifts from Mike."

"Mike's Magic Ski Tuning" is located in that old barn at 178 South Main Street. Inside, Mike has all the equipment necessary to convert old, tired skis into finely-tuned instruments. Mike remembers one satisfied customer who gave him some skis to tune. They were old and in bad shape, he recalls. He tuned them to perfection, he says, and the customer couldn't believe they were the same skis. They weren't.

Mike's method of tuning skis takes about an hour, to an hour and a half. Once skis are treated to his personal touch, they're converted into skis fit for a racer. And Mike should know.

For the past four years, Mike and now his younger brother Patrick, have been ski racing at Crotched Mountain in New Hampshire. Now that he is a member of the new high school ski team, he has to fit his business between school and racing.

Each weekend, his family travels to the codominium they rent at Crotched Mountain. The boys ski all weekend (Mom and Dad officiate some of the races), and then it's back to Cohasset Sunday night.

His ski business occupies his after school hours not otherwise occupied by racing. He is enthusiastic and dedicated to this budding enterprise.

"Whenever I have the time, I'm out in the barn. Business so far has been pretty good," he reports. So good, his mother adds, he is now purchasing much of the equipment he needs for the expensive sport of ski racing.

Mike got into this business pretty naturally. Since he was four years old, he's been skiing with his family. Tuning your skis is something every skiier should do before putting them away after each season.

When he got into racing four years ago, it became necessary to wax and file the edges of the skis after every race. Now he sometimes tunes them after each race and before a practice.

Mike became so expert he decided to begin his own business. Knowing that most skiiers hate to take the time "and the muscle," according to Robin, to tune their skis, Mike decided he'd do it for them.

For nine dollars (much less expensive than the pro shops in the area), Mike will P-tex your skis, file and wax them. He guarantees they'll be in better shape than ever before.

Mike Suhrbier

P-texing the skis, Mike explains, is a process in which he melts the waxlike substance with the assistance of a lighter or candle. The P-tex is dripped into gouges on the underside of the ski, places where the ski has likely been sliced by a rock. The P-tex fills in the gouge, which is later wiped clean and filed by Mike.

Mike has a special ski file to sharpen the edges of the ski. He then waxes the ski bottom, using special wax which is heated with an iron and dripped onto the ski. He smooths and cleans the surface for a polished product

As Mike explains, "if your skiis aren't sharpened, it's hard to turn on the ice. The waxing makes the ski go faster."

Waxing should be applied frequently to skis belonging to the avid skiier. The P-tex will only be applied if a serious gouge is found in the equipment.

"Tuning really protects the skis. Otherwise, your skis are going to be in worse condition every year," Mike says.

To get your skis professionally tuned, call Mike at 383-0349.

Student Government Day

Two Cohasset High School Juniors, Pam Ellis and Bob Shultz travelled to Middleboro Tuesday, Dec. 11 to take part in orientation exercises in the Massachusetts' Student Government Day Program. Pam was recently elected her school's delegate to the program while Bob was chosen an alternate delegate. The day-long program was held at the Southeastern Regional Educational Center. Mr. Edward F. Sheehan, Social Studies Department Chairman and faculty coordinator for the program, accompanied the students to Middleboro.

Jan. 25 the two Cohasset delegates will attend a glass bowl drawing and student delegate workshop program in Gardner Auditorium in the State House in Boston. It is at that time that the delegates will receive word on what state office they will be filling on Student Government Day in April. Thursday, March 14, Pam and Bob will attend another orientation meeting in the State House in Boston. Finally, Friday, April 12, the two will take part in Student Government Day proceedings at the State House.

During the program at the Southeast Regional Center, the student delegates were greeted by Marylou Chag, the Associate Director of Governmental Sevices for the Department of Education. Following her opening remarks they viewed a film entitled "Preserving Your Rights... And Those of Your Neighbors."

Highlight of the workshop was a speech by the Honorable Robert L. Anderson, Justice of the Wareham District Court. Judge Anderson conducted a question-and-answer session after his short but informative talk.

Students also participated in a role playing game. It involved a house committee hearing on a proposed bill that would give state tuition grants to parents of private school students.

SEMASS officials "does the SEMASS technology to do resource recovery require a different type of scrubber than those required in the Braintree and Boston facilities."

Asst. Town Counsel John Slater, who was designated selectmen's liason with SEMASS during contract negotiations, explained early last year that the rate hike provision was included within the SEMASS contract. The organization was aware of an impending ruling from the state, he noted, and it was specified in the contract that the participating communities would bear the burden of installing the anti-pollution device.

Meanwhile, Slater has requested copies of contracts SEMASS has negotiated with other communities, a copy of the SEMASS contract with Commonwealth Electric, and information about the negotiations they have held with the regional communities involved in a back-up landfill. He has yet to receive the information from SEMASS.

Slater said that while reviewing a SEMASS contract prior to town meeting, he discovered a provision which specified that any change in law regarding environmental concerns, could result in an increase in their costs to participating communities.

He outlined these concerns to the disposal committee and selectmen prior to town meeting.

Selectmen notified Slater last month to negotiate an agreement with SEMASS, per vote of the November town meeting.

Cohasset school sports news for the week

by Lisa Shumaker

Wrestling

The wrestling team opened their season with a tough match against Middleboro. Despite losing to this strong team, coach Torin Sweeney was pleased with Cohasset's performance and feels they gained valuable experience.

Individually, Brian Leary, Liam Stanford, and Ricky Roarke all wrestled well and won their matches. Sweeney was also impressed with the efforts of Doug Bennet who was wrestling in his first varsity match.

The Skippers bounced back to crush Marshfield in a non-league match. Cohasset was psyched up for this match and started off with four straight pins. Sweeney felt his team won on emotion as well as talent.

Doug Bennet and Jim Donahue both wrestled superbly and picked up their first victories of the season. John Froio and John Riley pinned their opponents.

The Norwell Christmas Wrestling Tournament was held over vacation. Cohasset did well. Three of the Skippers had great days and placed in their weight divisions. Brian Leary in the 107 lb. division came in fourth. In the 147 lb. division, Ricky Roarke also picked up a fourth. Liam Stanford was third in the 140 lb. division.

After the tournament, Cohasset lost to Duxbury in an exciting contest. Sweeney felt that if Cohasset was a little more experienced and lacked injuries, they could have beaten the Dragons. Brian Leary picked up his third straight victory along with Ricky Roarke who pinned his opponent. Doug Bennet tied his opponent whom he had lost to in the Christmas Tournament.

Led by Brian Leary (3-0), Liam Stanford (2-0), and Ricky Roarke (3-0), Sweeney feels that with their enthusiasm Cohasset has a good chance of having a winning season. He also believes that Wednesday when the team meets Norwell, Cohasset may start on a winning trail.

Ice Hockey

The boys traveled to Peabody to beat Bishop Fenwick 3 to 2. Bishop Fenwick was an extremely tough team, but Cohasset came out on top as a result of excellent defense.

Led by Philip Mahoney and Dan Curran the Skippers played their best game all season, according to coach Richard Izzo. Troy Chatterton, Alex Ghetto and Jeff Hartwell scored for Cohasset.

The Skippers then traveled to Rockland and were beaten 10-4. Rockland is one of the best teams in the league and, unfortunately, Cohasset had an off day.

The boys opened the Lobster Pot Tournament with a 4 to 2 loss to Hull. Even though the score was not in their favor, Izzo felt the entire team played well and actually outplayed Hull. Unfortunately, the Pirates' goalie had an outstanding game. Individually, Dan Curran had an excellent game along with Chris Ridge and Todd Fitzpatrick.

In a consolation game Cohasset lost to Marshfield 5 to 4. The Skippers came back from a 4-2 deficit to tie, but with one second left in the game Marshfield netted the winning goal.

Jeff Hartwell scored two goals. Danny Pompeo and Jamie Roy had one apiece.

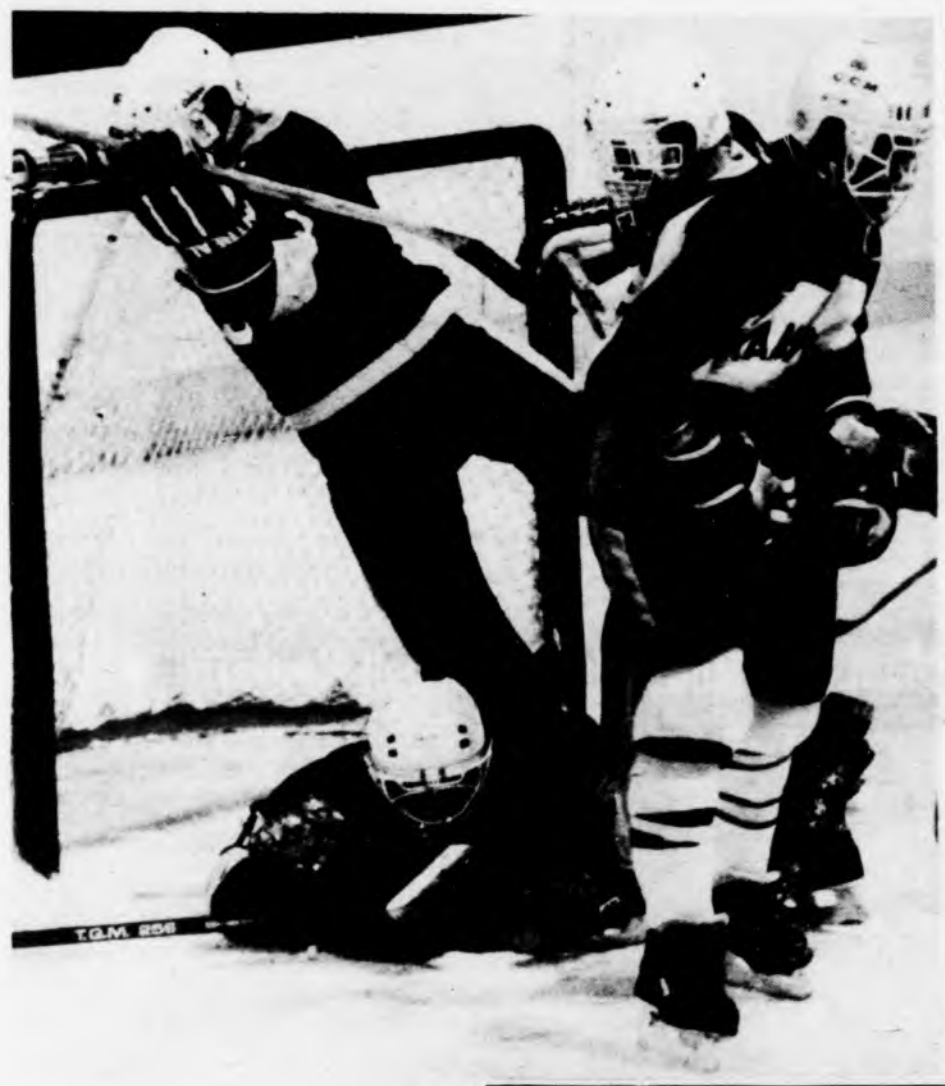
Wednesday, Whitman/Hanson came to Cohasset and edged the Skippers in an exciting game, 3 to 2. Unfortunately, Whitman/Hanson broke a 2 to 2 tie as the final buzzer sounded to win the game. Izzo believes this kind of loss comes from inexperience and that his team played fairly well overall. The Skippers were led by Troy Chatterton and Todd Fitzpatrick.

Saturday, the boys went to Hanover, losing 7 to 3. Cohasset skated well, according to Izzo, but the puck just wouldn't bounce their way.

Alex Ghetto, Todd Fitzpatrick and Jeff Hartwell scored for Cohasset and were backed up by strong defensive play from Kevin Leary and Danny Curran.

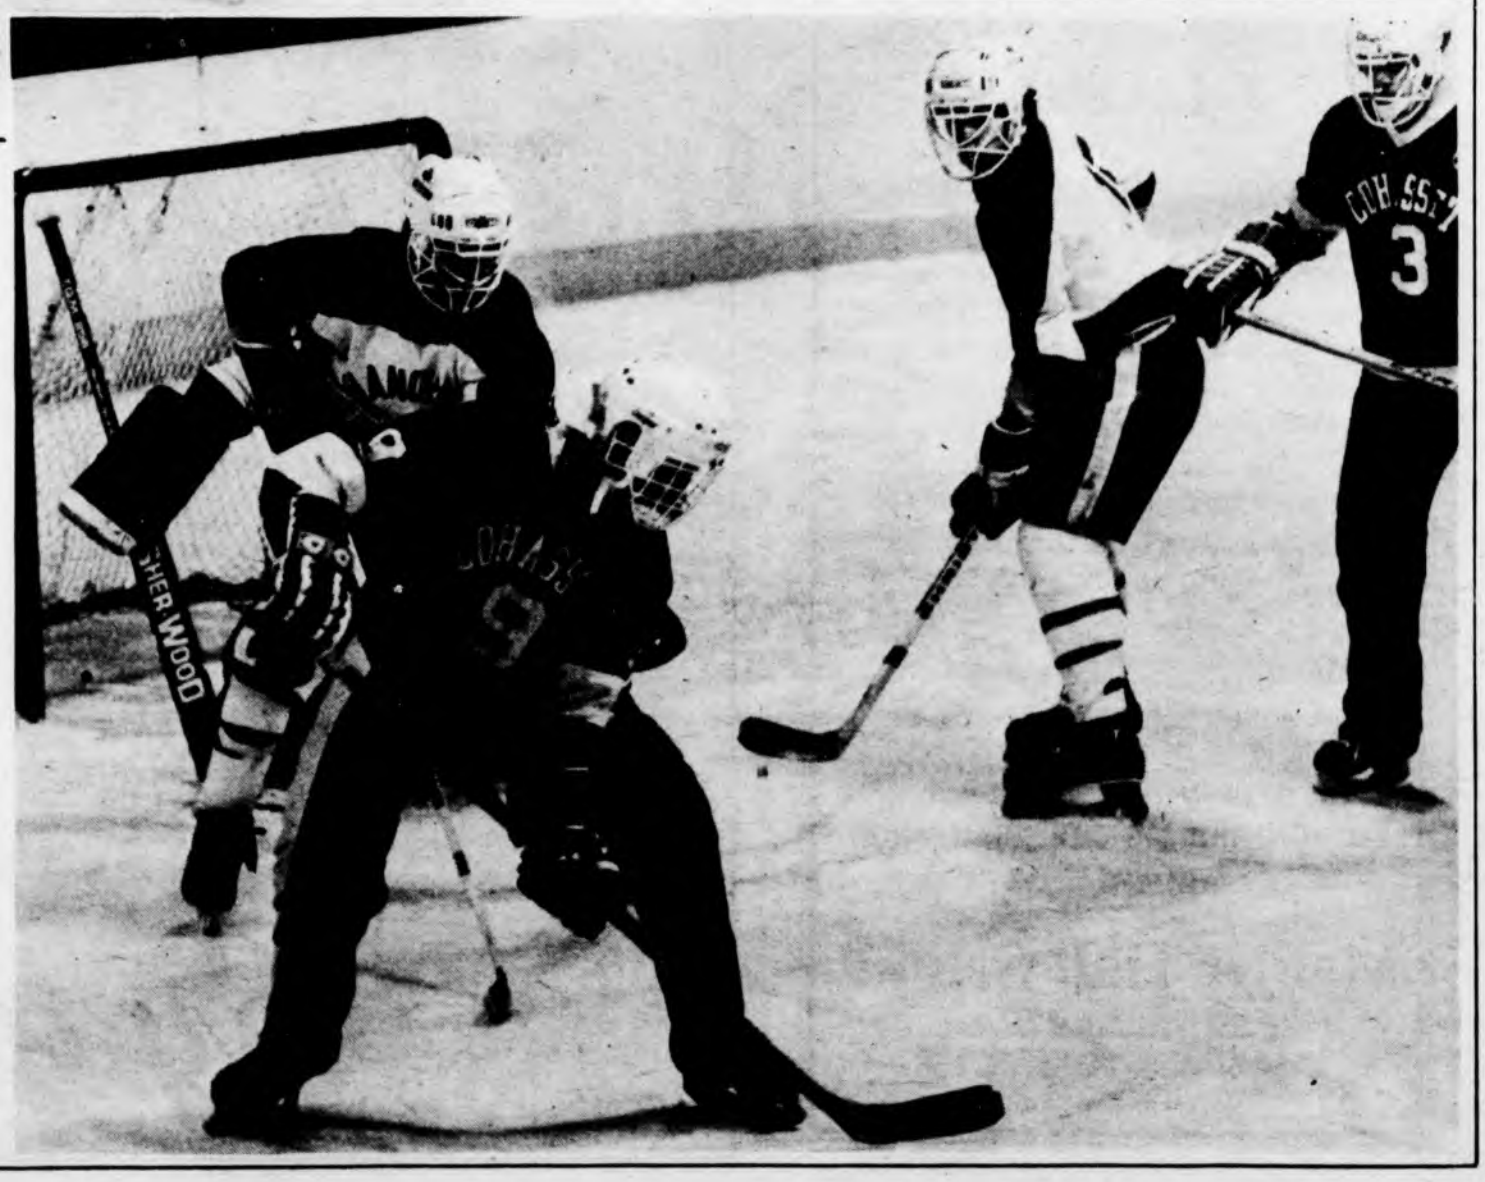
This week Cohasset faces Duxbury on Tuesday and Scituate on Saturday. Both teams are good. Scituate is acknowledged as one of the strongest teams not only in the league, but in the state as well.

Girls' Basketball



The girls were beaten by Norwell Friday in an exciting game, 50 to 41. Cohasset expected this to be a tough game, and everybody played hard. However, the Skippers had a difficult time handling Norwell's big people, and the girls were tentative on offense. Coach Bill Fallon feels that although his team lost this time, the Skippers have a good chance of beating Norwell the next time around.

High scorers for Cohasset were Tracy Fitzpatrick with 16 points and Carla Lucas with 10 points. Melissa Shea did an excellent job on defense.



Saturday, Cohasset downed Holbrook, 60-29. Defensively, the Skippers outhustled a weak Holbrook team. The key to Cohasset's victory came from their full court pressure, limiting Holbrook to only three points in the first quarter.

Cohasset was led in scoring by Tracy Fitzpatrick with 17 points, followed by Janet DiGirolamo with 12 points, and Carla Lucas with 10 points.

Tuesday, Cohasset will take on Scituate and Friday they travel to Sandwich to meet a very strong team. This promises to be a tough match for Cohasset, but Coach Fallon is optimistic.

Cohasset goaltender Peter Sandlom makes a dramatic save against Hanover last week.

Craig Mulcahy is about to clear the puck from the zone. No. 3 Dan Curran wants to respond.

Music Department News

Recently the Barbershop Chorus sang at the Ripley Road and Cohasset Knoll Nursing Homes. Christmas joy was evident from both singers and residents.

The following students have been accepted for Sr. District Music Festival to be held at Hingham High School Jan. 11 and 12—Concert at 2 p.m. Band: Cynthia Conklin - flute, Heather Davenport - clarinet; chorus: Michelle Meagher - soprano.

The following students have been accepted in Jr. District Music Festival to be held in March. Band: Daniel Bliss - trombone; chorus: Celia Mullen - soprano, Diana Kornet - alto, Joseph Mazza - tenor, and Daniel Farwell - bass.

The CHS music department has received some outstanding publicity lately over Cohasset Community Television (Channel 3). Many people have been involved, but special thanks should go to former music students Jesse Richards and Jeffrey Rhind for their many hours of work.

The junior-senior high Instrumental Director Jeffrey Dodge has accepted a full-time college position starting Feb. 1 at Eastern Nazarene College in Quincy. Their gain is our loss. Our best wishes go with you, and thanks for five years of dedicated service to Cohasset's students.

Cohasset High School will be hosting Sr. High SEMSBA Music Festival auditions Jan. 19th. High School musicians will be coming from all over the South Shore to audition for this music fesitval to be held in March.

Health clubs abound on South Shore

Physical fitness phase is now a craze

By Jane Lane

For South Shore residents, recreational and fitness activities abound. Everywhere you look, people are following the health and fitness craze.

Joggers can be viewed from every vantage point along our streets, joining tennis enthusiasts on the courts, golfers on the green, and skaters on our frozen ponds.

Basketball hoops are a natural outgrowth on our telephone poles. Young hockey players can be seen sharpening their skills without skates, under the glare of the summer sun.

We are a community of good sports-of people in constant motion.

That health spas and exercise facilities are in abundance should come as no surprise. They are the supply resulting from our demand.

There are numerous tennis, raquetball and swimming facilities throughout this area. We have outlined in this article, the health and exercise clubs located on the South Shore.

Body Dynamics is located at 6 West Street, off Route 18 behind the Stetson Shoe factory. The club has been at that location for the past five years.

According to manager Greg Lunt, Body Dynamics offers full Nautilus equipment, Olympic weights, full locker and shower facilities for men and women, a co-ed sauna andwhirlpool area, aerobics classes, and in a separate area, a physical therapy clinic for patients referred by a physician.

A unique aspect of this club is the physical fitness testing program conducted for each new member. Greg, who has a Master's degree in exercise physiology, conducts the test with the aid of a computer. Two electrodes are attached to the hand and foot and a mild electrical current calculates the total water retention within the body. Further calculations determine the percentage of fat, and the full fitness status of the member.

Stress, cardio vascular and aerobic capabilities are also measured by the computer.

Body Dynmamics offers an introductory membership of $25 for six weeks, $30 for a month, $84 for three months, $149 for six months, and $249 for a year.

There are $3 day passes, $4 for gym use, and $5 for aerobics and gym facilities.

Fully carpeted throughout with mirrors and a lounge area, Lunt says the club "matches or betters any equipment in the South Shore. And the expertise I offer with my background , no other club in this area comes close. You don't find many health clubs with the equipment and the expertise to match. We have that here," he says.

Webb's Pro Fitness Club is located on Route 53 in Norwell. The facility, owned by Greg Webb of Scituate, has been there for the past three years.

According to manager Amy Bristol, Webb's gym offers their members Nautilus equipment, free weights, a Universal, an Olympic-size pool, hot tub, sauna, aerobics, a supervised nursery, martial arts instruction, and swimming instruction for children and adults.

Webb's offers its members social as well as exercise programs. "The people who work here and come here as members are all friends, and we do a lot of things together. We have ski trips in the winter, and summer outings. This is a comfortable place, where everyone feels at home," she says.

Twenty-three staff members work at the facility. A contemporary building filled with sky lights, cathedral ceilings, sliding doors and light blue carpeting, the biggest attraction, Bristol says, is the huge pool. There is also a hot tub room with a skylight ceiling and decorated with a room of green plants.

"It's a beautiful place," Bristol states.

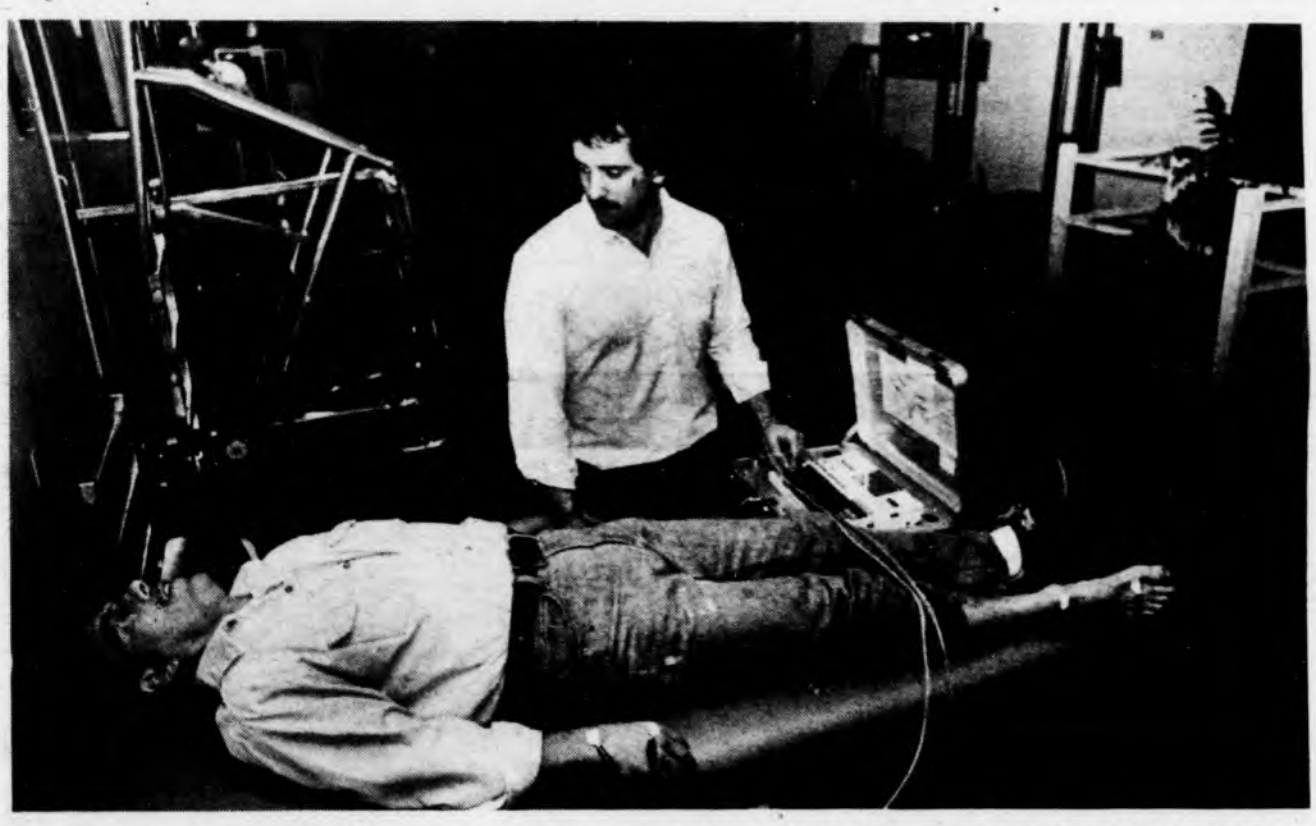
The World of Health is located in several communities, including the Hanover Mall.

According to company spokesman Derek Bevins, the club offers exercise machines, free weights, two different exercise bikes, a large aerobic floor for men and women's aerobics, an indoor running track, a sauna, steam and whirpool room and an indoor pool.

Aerobic classes from beginners to advanced are offered, with specialized exercise classes and "sparobics".

A unique feature of World of Health, he adds, is its membership in the International Physical Fitness Association-(IPFA). As a member of the association, a World of Health member can go to any of the other 2000 member clubs around the country and enjoy their facilities. If a World of Health member moves, there will likely be an IPFA membership club in that area.

The New England Fitness Center is located at 969 Washington Street, Route 53 in Weymouth. The facility, owned by the Hajjar brothers of Weymouth, was formerly a roller skating rink that was converted to the health club a year ago.



There are eight full and parttime staff members. Equipment includes a Universal, free weights, a sauna for women, steamroom for men, whirlpool, aerobic and exercise classes, and instructional programs for all equipment. Karate classes are also held every Monday, Wednesday and Thursday at 7:15 p.m.

A three-month membership at New England Fitness costs $75; six months is $132 and a year membership is $248. There are specials run off and on throughout the year.

Daily workouts are offered at the center for non-members for five dollars. That includes the use of all facilities. Classes for non-members cost $4.

Expect no miracles with House leadership change

How would this grab you?

You're the Queen of England, the general manager of the Celtics, the head squeezer of the Charmin in your store, or what-have-you. Your friend for years, the person you have appointed as your deputy and groomed as your successor comes to you and says:

"Pal, you're 60, you've been around a long time, I want your job, and I think it's time you got out of here and retired. Now, if you'll go gracefully I'll hold a big retirement party for you, you'll be guest of honor at my swearing-in, and no one will ever know we had this conversation. But if you refuse to retire without further delay, I'm leaving the fold, joining in alliance with your enemies, and together your enemies and I will then depose you!"

Unless you lived in Nazareth about 2,000 years ago, the chances are you would tell the impudent rascal to get out of your office and to clear out of his own office forthwith.

That's how it happened last year in the Massachusetts House. George Keverian of Everett, who had been Speaker Tommy McGee's close ally and Majority Leader for several years, gave the Speaker just such an ultimatum. He then joined the buzzword cause of 1984, "rules reform" — a cause he had consistently opposed in the past when he was doing business with McGee. The ploy succeeded brilliantly, and last week Keverian ousted McGee as Speaker of the House by the decisive vote of 90 for Keverian to 43 for McGee to 27 for the Republican candidate.

All the Right People are very pleased — as very pleased as they were a decade ago when the reduction in the size of the Massachusetts House to 160 members advanced liberty by reducing the influence of minorities and women in that body. Time will tell if the replacement of McGee by Keverian is for good or ill, but the perspicacious, tax-paying reader is advised to expect no miracles.

The Now Euphoric would do well to keep reminding themselves that until one year ago George Keverian was part, parcel, and trusted accomplice to everything Tommy McGee did. The time the House voted to raise its own salary by dawn's early light, Keverian was there. The time in December, 1982, when the store got given away to all manner of special interests, Keverian was there. When rules reform came up prior to 1984, Keverian was always there to help Tommy McGee knock it down.

About all that can be said for Keverian's 1984 change of heart on rules reform — change of tactics would be a more accurate description — is that from the time he broke with McGee, Keverian took a public position for a more rationally managed House of Representatives. Therefore, motive aside, he will be under strong constraint to abide by the commitment he has made.

But there are already a couple of indications that despite a few improvements in the rules, the House by and large will continue to do business by the quaint customs of its last quarter century.

The most obvious is the incipient banishment to legislative nowhere of Newton Rep. Joseph DeNucci, a longtime friend of both McGee and Keverian. DeNucci had urged McGee to step down on his own and give Keverian the speakership. When McGee chose to fight it out, DeNucci voted for him against Keverian only to honor the word he had given long ago. For this devotion to honor, DeNucci will apparently never be heard from again so long as Keverian is speaker.

That means the rules haven't really changed. Those who go along and get along get great and petty favors for their friends and their districts. Those who don't go along put out earnest press releases and have their concerns ignored when decisions are made.

The one rule reform that could have made a decisive difference will not so much as get considered. According to past and present rules, the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate command obedience by behavior that if you or I did it could be called "bribery and extortion."

This is how it works. The leadership in both Houses appoints committee chairmen to serve at their pleasure, and committee chairmanships come with sizeable pay hikes. Thus, if a legislator gets out of line he can lose (and a number have) a committee chairmanship along with $15 thousand or so in take-home pay.

By right, the House and Senate should be collegial bodies, the 200 members of which being free to speak out without fear of reprisal. For members to be free and independent, all members' pay must be equal and not subject to whimsical pejoration by other legislators.

So long as a misstatement by a member can cost him part of his livelihood, the legislature will operate on the basis of fear, fawning, and favoritism. It makes little difference if the power to intimidate resides solely with the Speaker and with the Senate President, or is shared with some Select Committee of the Earnest. So long as certain elected representatives can hold the salaries of their colleagues hostage democracy in the Cradle of Liberty will contine to revert to the back-scratching, screw-the-public ritual we have most of us come to abhor.

So far nothing has changed except the names of the scratchers and the scratchees, and that is why I caution the perspicacious reader to expect no miracles from the dramatic demise of Tommy McGee.

MUSINGS

By John H. Cutler

☐ There's nothing new under the sun, but there are a lot of old things we don't know.

☐ When it came to art, Aldous Huxley was a cynic: "If it were not for the intellectual snobs who pay, the arts would perish with their starving practitioners—let us thank heaven for hypocrisy." Somehow this harsh statement reminds me of a boor who said: "It took me only an hour to go through the Louvre and I could have done it in 20 minutes on roller skates."

☐ Man can live without air for seconds, without water for days, without food for weeks, and without ideas for years.

☐ Charles Kettering thought ignorance is the mother of research. He meant that a person must have a certain amount of intelligent ignorance to make any progress. And while we're on this subject, let's listen to Alfred North Whitehead, the great philosopher who taught at Harvard when I was a student there: "Not ignorance, but ignorance of ignorance, is the death of knowledge."

☐ Any historian will tell you that when the U.S. Cavalry defeated the American Indians, it was a great victory; but when the Indians won the battle, it was a massacre.

ing includes a large aerobics room with full carpet, a separate free weights room and a room for beginners with light weights and machines. There are separate dressing rooms for men and women, and shower and locker facilities.

L.A. Nautilus has been located at the VFW Parkway in Rockland for the past five years. Much of their clientele is from neighboring towns such as Weymouth, Braintree and Hingham.

Manager Fran Reidy of Hingham says this is the place people come for results.

"People want to come here. It's not just a spa. People like it here, they're not afraid to really work out here and sweat. They enjoy working out here, and there's all kinds of people. I think L.A. Nautilus offers the best prices for what you get and the service we provide," she explains.

A one-year membership cost $250; six months cost $175, and a three-month membership cost $99. There'll be a special membership opportunity in February, according to the manager.

L.A. Nautilus offers two full circuits of Nautilus, eight tons of free weights, an indoor pool, tanning salon, sauna, whirlpool, lifecycles and individual instruction.

There are eight staff members at the facility which is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., and Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The landscaped grounds lead to a one-story building which houses a large aerobics floor and warm-up room, Nautilus facilities in a separate room, aerobic equiopment in another area, and an indoor pool.

"We're not here to take your money," Reidy states. "Once we have the money, that's where the service begins and doesn't stop. You'e made to feel special here, and we're here to help you."

Woman's World of Health is located on Route 53 in Hanover, across from the mall and next to Pearl Vision. There is also a Weymouth club located at Pleasant Shops.

According to the Hanover manager, the two clubs are individually owned. In the Hanover facility, individualized exercise programs are offered 11 times a day, along with 50-minute aerobic type groups.

There is sauna, steam and showers and a sun room. The sun room helps the body to senthisize vitamin D more quickly, and adds a healthy color to the skin.

There is also circuit training with the Nautilus. Each 10 staff members have been certified and trained with the Physical Fitness Research and Training Institute in Watertown.

According to the manager, each member is given an individualized exercise and weight program. This past fall, Woman's World Health Spa purchased an Anthropometric fitness testing machine which measures the physical fitness of each member. Blood pressure, body composition, strength, flexibility, and body types are all tested and a computer printout calculates the results. A specialized exercise plan is then prepared for the member.

"I think our individualized attention to each member is what makes us special," the manager states. "We go over the goals the member hopes to attain, and get a program together to meet those goals. Everything is considered and a follow-up is made each time the member comes in to see how well she is progressing and whether she is doing the exercises correctly. The program is also alternated every 12 times a member comes into the spa."

The oldest health club in New England is the Gloria Stevens salon, located in Marshfield at the Ventress Memorial Library plaza, and in Weymouth next to Shaw's supermarket.

According to a spokesman for the franchise who refused to identify herself, the salons offer weight training, aerobic classes, individual exercise classes, a flexibility program, and a pregnancy exercise program.

Each facility has six to eight trained instructors, depending on the membership total. Extensive training is given to all staff members, in exercise and nutrition. Each instructor is certified at a school in Braintree.

Memberships, which may be for six months or a year, vary according to the spa. There is an introductory offer of $25 for six weeks, with additional specials in the summer and during holidays.

According to the spokesman, Gloria Stevens is noted for its "top notch, warm, and friendly service. Our members also get quick results."

And how do we eat these days? . . . Very badly!

According to a local nutritionist, the average diet in the United States, the most bountiful country on the planet, is "extremely poor, to out and out malnourished."

He's not talking famine, nor of inner-city poverty. Mark Mincolla of Cohasset is saying the average citizen right here on the South Shore doesn't eat properly. Whether it is ignorance or refusal to eat the proper foods, most Americans have a lousy diet that contributes to many diseases and ailments.

There is a tendency among such professionals, Mincolla admits, to oversensationalize the problem of our unhealthful diet. "I don't like to do it, but there's almost a need to oversensationalize," he says. "Most people eat so badly . . . eating is the one thing we do consistently. And we do it so badly."

Dr. Mincolla

He sees it all. As a nutritionist at Raskin Medical on Route 3A in Cohasset, Mincolla sees patients referred by other physicians.

"I'm amazed at how poorly advised people are. They don't know that six of the ten leading causes of death are related to our diet. That is a fact proven by a government study, conducted with our tax dollars. Yet no one knows or cares about it.

"Yes, it's important to keep our weight down. But that is a small part of it. It's extremely important to keep the pounds off, but it's just as important to keep the sodium off. Simply, there are too many strokes, too many heart attacks that could have been avoided if we knew how to manage our lifesytles, " he adds.

It was 15 years ago that Mincolla "saw the light" and changed his diet. Since then it's been a life empty of processed sugar, salt, cholesterol, additives and preservatives.

But the question inevitably crops up, isn't life boring without tortilla chips and Coke?

Negative, he instantly replies. "Maybe fifteen years ago, when I first switched my diet. But now, there are so many wonderful alternatives and ways to prepare food. Right off the top of my head I could name at least 100 cookbooks with recipes that everyone would love."

As a science, nutrition is only 30 years old. There are few physicians around who can correctly advise a patient on proper dietary care. That is why specialists such as Mincolla fill their days talking with patients about such medical ailments as heart disease and cancer.

But diet alone, Mincolla emphasizes, is not a cure-all for all medical problems. A person suffering from diabetes or cancer must seek medical care from a physician, in addition to proper dietary attention.

Mincolla quotes frequently from the 1977 study of dietary goals for the United States, conducted by the Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs of the U.S. Senate.

That report stated, "Fat and sugar consumption have risen to the point where these two dietary elements alone now comprise at least 60 percent of the caloric intact. In the view of doctors and nutritionists consulted by the Select Committee, these and other changes in the diet amount to a wave of malnutrition, profoundly damaging to the nation's health."

According to the study, the over-consumption of fat, saturated fat in particular, as well as cholesterol, sugar, salt, and alcohol have been related to six of the leading causes of death: heart disease, cancer, cerebrovascular disease, diabetes, arteriosclerosis and cirhosis of the liver.

These are the facts Mincolla says can be prevented. "If preventative measures are taken, it will have a profound impact on our lives," he explains. "By better informing ourselves about good nutrition, we can increase our possibilities for wellness."

The housewife doing the weekly grocery shopping. The middle-aged man recovering from a severe heart attack. The teenager about to imbark on another diet. These are all people who seek the advice of a nutritionist.

"Nutrition is not a panacea for all ailments. But many, including migranes, and high blood pressure, are traceable directly or indirectly, to the diet. Every meal we eat - our diet has ramfications in all directions," Mincolla states.

It's a difficult task to undertake, he admits. What with the billions of dollars spent advertising pre-sweetened cereals, processed white breads and rices, potato chips and soft drinks. The major difference is knowing what not to buy, he says. We must stop our intact of empty, perhaps damaging calories.

"It's a travesty what Madison Avenue has done to our young people. In fact, it's downright dangerous. They spend billions of dollars to get inside our kids' heads, filling them with sweeetened processed cereals, candy and junk food," he says.

Mincolla agrees with many of the goals outlined by the 1977 Senate study which concluded:

Increase consumption of fruits and vegetables and whole grains to make up 60 percent of the caloric intact.

Decrease consumption of red meats and increase consumption of poultry and fish (and shellfish).

Decrease consumption of foods high in fat and partially substitute poly-unsaturated for saturated fats : i.e. for the most part cut down on animal fats -substitute vegetable fats, also low fat dairy products for whole fat dairy products, except for young children.

Reduce cholesterol levels to 300 mg. per day (examples, one lobster equals 1000 mg., a large egg equals 312 mg., and one cup grated cheddar cheese equals 120 mg.)

Decrease consumption of sugar and foods high in sugar content by approximately 40 percent.

Decrease consumption of salt and foods high in salt content (sodium) by as much as 85 percent, so as not to exceed 3000 mg. per day (example, one pound Canadian bacon, 8578 mg., one pound brown and serve sausage, 5978 mg., and one cup chicken noodle soup mix, 979 mg.)

Dancing to stay in shape

It's ladies day out . . .

By Jane Lane

"What do you mean, cool down. What do you think we are, race horses?"

They laugh a lot. It's not so much the exercise that brings them back each week. It's the opportunity to have a few laughs and some conversation with friends.

For many of the senior citizens who come to dance each week at the Marshfield Council for the Aging, this may be the only time they get out of the house. Some have said if it weren't for the line dancing classes, they would likely sit all day, and not talk with anyone.

It's hard to believe these gals in Marshfield are anything but active. Once they take to the dance floor, it's difficult to get them off. It's something in their lives they look forward to, something small that gives their lives purpose.

They complain to their instructor, they giggle as they take a wrong turn, and enjoy the companionship of friends. As one lady noted, many of the women here are widows, and this may be the only chance they have to dance.

And for one hour a week, these ladies dance. There's just a brief intermission for a small glass of juice, and then it's back to practice.

Health & Fitness

Helen Colameco of Norwell instructs senior citizens' line dancing classes in Hingham, Norwell, Hanover, Scituate and in Marshfield. A ballroom dancer, Helen has been conducting the dance classes for three years.

Over 50, and as shapely as a thirty year-old, Helen says "I can relate very well to these people."

The music, she says, makes it fun for the seniors. "Most people enjoy exercising to music. I select music that is catered to this age group," Helen says.

About 20 women a week come to the Marshfield class, where they have learned the Hully Gully (their favorite), the Bosa Nova, and several partner and circle dances. But before they commence with the exercises, they warm up to some stretching exercises. That's where the moaning part comes in.

Because dancing involves the use of many body muscles, Helen begins each session with stretching exercises for the waist, shoulders, for posture, arms - from the fingers to the toes.

And when the hour workout is completed, there is a brief "cool down" period.

As Helen insists they walk briskly in a circle for about five minutes, good-natured grumbling is heard throughout the room. "What do you mean, cool down. What do you think we are, race horses?" one woman yells.

Several of the women in the class say they exercise in some fashion at home.

One of the regulars at the line dancing class is 89 year-old Catherine McCaig. (She'll be 90 January 23, but for now she's 89).

"I come here every week," she says, smiling. "I like to dance, and I enjoy the people here. It's good exercise too. I do exercises at home, bending and stretching in the morning. I can touch the floor with both hands."

Other regulars, such as Irene Cavanaugh, 78, always enjoyed dancing, especially ballroom version. Although this dance floor is not comparable to what they once danced upon, it's an acceptable substitute for them.

"It makes us feel rejuvenated. And it's a lot of laughs," is how Mary Horton, Delores Rojas, and Eleanor Younker describe their weekly instruction.

Sometimes, when you're old, you tend to get lazy, they say. Attending a dance or exercise class may mean the difference between having a good time with friends, or staying in bed for the day.

"I can see this class has made a difference in some of the women here," instructor Helen says. "Some are

How do we eat . . .

"We have a tremendous ability to bring about a predictable impact on our health," according to Mincolla, a Ph D. in nutrition. "The idea is not to eat ignorantly. We possess the capability of improving our health in a specific manner. We can literally prevent disease and specific disorders. All we eat and drink has drastic after effects. Education is the bottom line."

Dr. Mincolla frequently talks at schools and to organizations about the need for good nutrition. His next speaking engagement is Tuesday, Jan. 15 at the Scituate Montessori School, Cornet Stetson Road (Route 123), at 7:30 p.m. The program is free and open to the public.

'Towards Zero:' A delectable guessing game for the brain

By Corinne A. Kutish

THEATRE REVIEW

At one point during the first act of Nickerson Theatre's current production of the Agatha Christie drawing room mystery, "Towards Zero," one of the characters describes his opinion of murder mysteries.

John Adair, as the slow-talking Thomas Royde, claims that mysteries shouldn't start out with the murder, but rather end with it. He said he was more interested in the causes and events that brought people together at a certain time and certain place, converging towards zero hour — the murder.

Following this philosophy, "Towards Zero" tantalizes the audience with a series of events and characters that first keep you guessing at who is to be murdered, and only then, who is the murderer.

On the scene arrives a friend from the past who loves Neville's ex-wife, a gentleman enamoured with his present wife, plus the hostess' secretary and her lawyer. The time is the 1920's and the stage is set for murder.

Nickerson's production is an engaging one. The pace is slow and methodical, but Donald Soule's set is exquisite and some of the characterizations are well-developed.

The stage lit up with excitement with every entrance of Linda Cameron as the present Mrs. Strange, an overly-dramatic flapper type. Every gesture was exaggerated to perfection as she ran through the emotions of furor, boredom and anxiety.

Niels Miller (L) is Treves, John Adair (forefront with pipe) is Thomas Royde, Pat Pellows is Lady Tressilian (seated) and Lynda Robinson (standing, right) is Mary in Agatha Christie's mystery thriller, "Towards Zero" continuing at the Nickerson Theatre through Jan. 26.

As Kay Strange's husband, Neville, Robert Riley plays the epitome of the British good sport. Easy-going and smiling broadly, everything has always gone his way, to the resentment of his old friend, Thomas Royde.

As Royde, John Adair is the slow but steady type. He lost out to Neville eight years earlier in his pursuit of Audrey, the first Mrs. Strange. Now he's furious at Neville's renewed attempts to gain her affection.

Floating delicately amongst them like a grey ghost is Linda Peterson, the type who exudes that Grace Kelly look of wealth and good breeding. She serves as the enigma. After all, why would any rejected wife consent to spend her vacation with her ex-husband and his snippy new wife.

Perhaps the best scene of the play was Linda Cameron's display of fireworks when she overhears Neville's proposal of remarriage to Audrey. She pleads, threatens and cajoles, throwing herself dramatically on the couch and gripping savagely at Neville's arms.

Weaker in their characterizations were Pat Pellows as Lady Tressilian, who could have shown a little more ire in her voice, and Niels Miller as lawyer Mathew Treeves, who seemed devoid of any recognizable personality.

Moving the plot along was Linda Robinson as Mary Aldin, the long-suffering secretary to Lady Tressilian, Paul O'Brien as Superintendent Battle, the required blustery detective from Scotland Yard, and Eric Menyuk and David Woods as members of the local police.

The director was Grey Johnson; costumes by Craig Sonnenberg; and lighting by Joanne Zaharis.

"Towards Zero," which represents the third offering of the 84-85 Nickerson Theatre season, will continue through Saturday, Jan. 26th. Although the Nickerson organization did a magnificent job of selling season subscriptions to the theatre, a dozen or more tickets are apparantly available to most performances.

Go on and take in "Towards Zero." It'll keep you guessing, a delectable pastime for the brain.

In addition to Nickerson Theatre's usual Tuesday through Sunday night performances and their Sunday matinee at 2 p.m., they have also added one Saturday afternoon matinee at 4 p.m. on Saturday, Jan. 19.

Some Faithfuls worth the effort

By Peggy Beals

FROM THE BOOKSHELF

" 'Tis the good reader who makes the good book." Emerson

O come All Ye Faithful

The hoopla goes to new books, of which so many are published, so few worthwhile that Elie Wiesel remarked, "More books are published than are written." Here are some old faithfuls worth the effort of obtaining:

May Sarton's "Miss Pickthorn and Mr. Hare" is a slim, delightful book, not typical Sarton. Pickthorn is a retired teacher in a little New England town. Hare, a bum, moves into the hen house across the way, so distracting Pickthorn she involves the selectmen in opposing him. Some choice observations about the "speed" of business at Town Hall are worked in.

There's a warm fuzzy feeling when you get hold of a solid, chewy, proven book that will last a while. Ben Ames Williams fills this need for many. His "Come Spring" is set in early days in the Northeast, mixing gentle romance with frontier adventure. "House Divided" and "House Conquered" by Williams are also popular when all else palls. Another is J.B. Priestley's "The Good Companions." First published in MCMXXIX, its timeless tale, set in England, continues to satisfy. It's about a group of lonely people who chance to meet and find they can form their own caring sustaining family unit.

Ring In The New

But do it cautiously. Jeffrey Archer can write, no question. His "First Among Equals" is an interesting look at British politics behind a group of characters with less depth than the average comic strip. Susannah Kells does better by us. "A Crowning Mercy," now followed by "Fallen Angels" are stout historical fiction about the people on the Lazen estate. The books are full-blooded, making the period vividly alive, but so naturally crafted the research file cards never show.

"The Ladies of the Club" by Santemeyer is proving one of the most requested, least finished best sellers. Many would have liked severe pruning. Has Madison Ave. conned us all?

Sleep In Heavenly Peace

The selection of something to read in bed needs careful attention. A lot of intellectuals choose mysteries; others find them too stimulating, and prefer such soothing works as "Pilgrim's Inn" and others by Elizabeth Goudge. The Barchester novels of Anthony Trollope, recently dramatized on Ch. 2, including "The Warden" and others, are gentle, witty choices, as are those of his spiritual descendent Angela Thirkell, of whom more later. D.E. Stevenson's many works are as sedative as warm milk, probably appealing more to feminine readers.

Comfort My People

Rabbi Harold Kushner of Temple Israel, Natick, set out to comfort himself when he wrestled with theology, and the death of his son in early teens. His product, "When Bad Things Happen to Good People," has helped millions. Available in hard cover and paper, it is easy to read, it deals with the immediate feelings survivors have of guilt, anger, helplessness, and is recommended without hesitation as superb reading for anyone trying to reconcile a tragic event.

Those who miss the old "Topic Religion" team of Kushner, the Rev. Murray Kenny, Sr. Mary Hennessy and Fr. Richard Cunningham will rejoice to know they're now availale at about 6 a.m. on Sunday morning on "Talking of Religion" on WRKO, AM radio, 680 on the dial.

Good Tidings

Have you read something you're bursting to tell about? Please share your enthusiasm with us. So many books, they begin to blur. We need to guide each other to the cream of the lot.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

One good thing about Christmas shopping--it toughens us up for the January sales. But for those of us who have had our fill of shopping and have to get our second wind before venturing out to the malls and stores, it's a treat to catch up on our reading. I was doing just that one drizzly afternoon last week, reading the October issue of "Bon Appetit" when the name "Marshfield" caught my eye under the section entitled "Too Busy to Cook?". Featured in the national magazine were recipes sent in by Barbara Dobson, the assistant town collector of Marshfield. She wrote: . . . "I didn't really start to cook until I moved into my own apartment four years ago." Today she saves time by doubling recipes so there will be leftovers to freeze. Fresh vegetables from her father's gardens saves many a trip to market. Barbara takes evening courses in computers and business; frequents antique shops and auctions. In her vacation travels she likes to sample native cuisines. Here is her recipe called

MY OWN FIVE-SPICE CHICKEN

1/2 c. soy sauce
1/4 c. minced onion
1 tsp. grated fresh ginger
1 garlic clove, crushed
1 3 to 4 pound frying chicken, cut into serving pieces
1/2 tsp. cinnamon
1/4 tsp. each ground allspice, crushed aniseed
1/8 tsp. ground cloves
Dash of freshly ground pepper

Combine first four ingredients in shallow dish and mix well. Marinate chicken, covered and refrigerated overnight, turning twice. Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Drain chicken, discarding marinade. Transfer to 7x11" baking dish. Combine remaining ingredients and sprinkle over chicken. Bake until tender, turning, about one hour. Serves 4.

For those who still have the stamina (and money) required to take advantage of bargains that mock the prices asked before Christmas, it's difficult to arrive home late to a family looking hungry. That's when knowing there's a casserole in the freezer makes such moments easier to bear. Aileen Claire writes of her recipe: "It has lots of protein zap with its hard-cooked eggs, toasted wheat germ and pecans. It may be made in individual ramekins and served with a green vegetable or fresh fruit salad for a well-balanced and flavorful meal.

WHEAT GERM EGG SALAD CASSEROLE

6 hard-cooked eggs, coarsely chopped
1 1/2 c. thinly sliced celery
1/2 tsp. dry mustard
1/4 tsp. each, salt and onion salt, dash of pepper
3/4 c. mayonnaise
1 T. ea. chopped parsley and melted butter
1/2 c. toasted wheat germ
3T chopped pecans

Combine first eight ingredients. Mix well. Spoon an equal amount into 4 ramekins. Bake in 375 degree oven for 15 min. Mix together butter, toasted wheat germ and pecans. Sprinkle over salad mixture and bake 5 to 10 min. longer. Serves 4.

Probably the only one in town who wasn't watching football on New Year's Day, I amused myself by reading and working up an appetite with a new cookbook one of our sons gave me for Christmas. Called "The Doubleday Cookbook", it's a beauty, with over 1,300 pages that even include instructions on how to shop and recipes as complex as Konigberger Klops (German Meat Balls) to something as quick and easy as these

PEANUT BUTTER BARS

1 c. sugar
1 c. light corn syrup
1 (12-oz.) jar crunchy peanut butter
4 c. toasted rice cereal
1 c. coarsely chopped unsalted peanuts, optional

Heat and stir sugar, syrup and peanut butter in a very large saucepan over moderate heat until mixture boils. Off heat, mix in remaining ingrediets. Pack into a well-greased 9"x13"x2" baking pan and cool. Cut into bars. Makes 4 dozen. About 90 calories each (without peanuts), 110 calories (with peanuts).

PATCHES

by Lois MARTIN

Ummmmm . . .Harry couldn't read

By Lois Martin

His name was Harry and he was our oil man. He'd come whenever called and funnel fuel into the tank without any more falderal than the milkman brought his goods or the paperboy plopped down his paper.

But there was a difference, one I didn't know about until the day the oil went up and I questioned the bill.

"Look at this, Harry," I said, holding the slip of paper. "See, it's gone up since last month."

With my right index finger I was pointing to last month's listing and cost, comparing it then, again with the finger at work, with what he'd delivered that day.

"Ummmhumm," said Harry. "Ummm."

I don't know what I'd expected Harry to say. But something about the way in which he said nothing caught my attention. He looked at me, the piece of paper, even my pointing finger. But then I knew what Harry wasn't doing. He wasn't reading. Because Harry couldn't read.

So we switched our conversation back, Harry and I, about how things keep going up, and there'd be no telling what things would cost in a few years if this kept up. Ummmhumm.

When he'd left, I checked the slip again. There was a mark there. I'd never looked for Harry's signature because I didn't give a hoot about requiring it. He delivered. I paid. We had the perfect working relationship. And never before had I caused him to go over that bill with me. Harry, whose life I knew hadn't been a piece of cake anyway, managed to conduct business for the company without reading or writing skills. The company told him how much to deliver. He did it, using the familiar gauges on equipment. And the bill was already prepared.

Harry enlightened me. He was the first person I'd met who didn't know how to read and write . . . That is, the first I knew of.

Within a few months of that time I called the superintendent of schools to ask if I could teach an adult education program for people who hadn't had the opportunity, freedom, and privilege to learn how to read and write.

The class was organized and our group was the first of its kind if not in the state of Virginia, and I hold it dear, then for many miles around.

The first night none of us knew what to expect. We were strangers to one another. I "talked funny." But we had, after all, something in common. We all wanted everyone to know how to read and write.

That night was the first of about five years' worth of a unique privilege for me.

One doesn't go around saying he or she can't read when that's the case. In fact there are some, in every area, though many may not believe this, who, for countless reasons, never learned.

My students were adults. Among them were Foster and Helen. Foster had been whipped out of the first grade when his father needed help building a barn. The barn had long since fallen down, he said, and he still hadn't had a chance to go back to school. In the interim, he'd grown, married Helen, fathered six children and worked for the state on road construction. He was a dedicated father, worker, husband, who at 56, was determined to learn to read and write.

We used basic workbooks. Among the first three words being learned was 'man'. Foster attacked his workbook with zeal. At lunchtime, he was spotted studying it as he sat in the seat of his heavy equipment on the road job.

And as he read and wrote to me as weeks passed, his first conquest was what he was, "a man". He told me he'd never known what the signs said.

Pride was best reflected in the faces of his children and his wife when we held our spring 'graduation' ceremony.

Then there was Rosetta, in a different class a few years later, a gorgeous black woman, who boarded the bus each day for her domestic job outside D.C. She was not a beginner, but closer to grade 5 level. She'd been reading whenever and however possible as she raised her large family alone.

When I moved, she was ready for her GED test, the one that has equal rating with a high school diploma. She called me to tell me her victory, one we shared with hoots of glee.

There'd been Bud, the guy in his 30's who never had been to school. The first time he wrote his name on anything official it was to enter a contest at a local store. He won an Easter bunny.

Some of my students died during those years. We all went to the funerals. Our class got state notice. We thought we were hot stuff, with all we were learning. And we were.

Anyway, I was thinking of them the other day. They were part of one of the most gratifying experiences I've known.

I'd be hard-pressed to tell you who among us learned most.

There are many grand people who have not had a chance to satisfy their personal yen for learning. We don't get to know about it because they don't tap you on the shoulder to tell you so.

Most of them have accommodated the learning void by mastering jobs and skills that are startling and no small accomplishment.

Anyway, here's to you, Harry, and just like we were saying, everything keeps going up. UmmmmHummmm.

Excercise is good for the mind

By Jane Tamburri Spitz

A roomful of people struggles to keep the pace set by lively music. They mimic the instructor's vigorous movements huffing and puffing between bared teeth. Finally the record ends and appreciative bodies become limp. When they return 20 minutes later, having showered and changed, they look triumphant.

These people punish their bodies in the name of physical fitness. Could it be that their psyches are also benefiting from their commitment to exercise?

Few would argue that physical exercise contributes to an overall good feeling. Besides keeping fit, a regular workout program results in a sense of accomplishment. The value of exercise, however, may not end here.

Increased self-confidence, emotional well-being and the alleviation of stress, sleeplessness and mood swings are among the benefits of exercising regularly, according to mental health professionals. In fact, many therapists recommend physical activity, such as dancing, swimming and walking, to patients in the treatment of a variety of problems, from insomnia to depression.

"Exercise that contributes to a fit cardio-vacular system is good for you, not just physically but emotionally. It makes you feel better about yourself. Anything that you recognize in yourself as positive leads to greater self-esteem," said Dr. Robert Cahill, a psychologist at the South Shore Psychotherapy Collaborative in Norwell.

HEALTH & FITNESS

"Exercise can be distinctively helpful in leading to a disciplined and intentional life," claims Dr. Max Munro of Cohasset. As a psychologist, Munro treats people who are addicted to alcohol and drugs. He uses exercise as part of therapy because it helps to establish a sense of control over one's life, which is essential to successful treatment.

So often when people are depressed they withdraw, think about themselves and become more depressed. The deeper the depression becomes the more difficult it is to keep motivated. A change at work, returning to school or joining an organization or health club can help to break the cycle of depression.

"I recommend to clients who are experiencing a negative crisis, such as divorce, that they do something positive for themselves. Exercise is one way of putting energy into something constructive," said Marilyn Dawber, a clinical social worker who shares her Scituate and Brookline offices with her husband, William Dawber, also a counselor.

A flexible exercise program can serve as an alternative to mild anti-depressant medications or tranquilizers, according to the Dawbers. "Some depression is biochemical in nature and medication is used to correct the body chemistry. I have one patient whose physician found she had a chemical imbalance. She refused to take drugs and came up with a jogging schedule instead," said William Dawber.

The claim that physical activity — riding an exercise bike or aerobic dancing — effects body chemistry is becoming more prevalent among mental health experts. Dr. Robert Edgerly, a Marshfield psychologist, said, "Chemically, things happen when you exercise. Endorphins (chemicals produced in the brain) are manufactured in response to pain. When you exercise, you are punishing your joints. Your brain produces endorphins which are similar to a natural morphine. When your body tones up and gets used to jogging, for example, you no longer feel the pain but the brain continues to secrete chemicals. That's what is known as a jogger's high."

The connection between physical and mental health is not a new concept. Freud spoke of the correlation between mind and body long before the emphasis in recent years on physical fitness, explained Boni Carson DiMatteo of Atlantic Counseling in Scituate. As a former dance therapist, DiMatteo currently uses body exercise and relaxation techniques in her practice as a psychotherapist.

"Let's say you are shy. You can't go up and introduce yourself to a stranger. By playing racquetball you learn to push yourself beyond your limits. The confidence you gain on the court will extend into other areas of your life. You may eventually learn to push beyond your emotional limits and become more outgoing," said DiMatteo.

As a firm believer in the relation between physical and emotional well-being, Lisette DeMiranda, a psychotherapist at Hanover's Life Arts, claims that body sensations are sometimes the first sign of what we are feeling. "Often our bodies show us that we are angry before we are mentally aware of the emotion. A pressure in your chest, clammy hands or tense muscles could be a sign of anger or fright.

"So many of us are numb from the neck down. We need to increase our awareness of our bodies." Warning against overexertion that can break down muscle tissue, DeMiranda advises stretching exercises, calisthenics and yoga. Gently working the muscles is effective in toning the body and feeling energized.

Certainly exercise is not a cure-all, but it is definitely important in maintaining mental health, according to Anita Aherne, a therapist at Centering Psychotherapy Service in Norwell. "When you are exercising you don't think about your problems. In that way it's like meditation."

In addition, exercise is a stress reducer. Therefore when patients have sleeping problems many counselors recommend an exercise program. Claire Robinson of the Marshfield Hills Counseling Center warns against overstimulation right before bed time.

Hearing these comments extolling the virtues of regular exercise may give some people the impetus to begin a physical fitness program. For some, joining a health or athletic club, participating in team sports or partner competition helps to stick with it. Others prefer to exercise alone. Either way it's time to get started!

widows, who had no confidence now that they're alone. Sometimes, just through this class, they learn new things and gain new confidence."

Scituate resident Nina Constantinides, who has been teaching exercise class for seniors for the past four years, agrees with that assessment.

"Age should not be a factor in deciding whether to exercise. Everyone should exercise," she says. Nina, who teaches at the Scituate Senior Center, recently had a 90 year-old woman in one class. Although she recently moved to Florida, the woman is remembered as one of the best-conditioned members in the Scituate program.

For seniors, Nina likes to do exercises that can be done in a chair, standing exercises, and some aerobics. Her one-hour program, which can be seen Monday through Friday morning on Scituate Cable channel 3, also contains warm ups and cool down session.

"I concentrate on flexibility and muscular strength and the 20-minute aerobics helps the cardio-vascular system," she explains. The major factor in senior citizens working out, Nina says, is that the pace is decreased, and the repetition of the exercises is reduced. She also recommends against any exercise where the movement is constantly repeated, perhaps causing injury. That is why she prefers brisk walking for seniors, rather than jogging.

Over a year ago, Nina formed the Scituate Walkie Talkies, a group of residents who walk from three to five miles every Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. Several senior citizens have joined the group, particularly in the warm weather. They walk two miles, she said.

"It's never too late to exercise. The body will respond at any age. If you just stick to a program of regular exercise, it's much better for the body than working out and then quitting and then starting up again," Nina says.

To avoid frustration or boredom with an exercise program, Nina advocates a variety of activities. Everyone, including senior citizens, should complete some form of exercise three times a week for 45 minutes.

"One day you could take a brisk walk. The next day you could do some conditioning exercises. The following day you could do aerobics, and the next day you could go back to the conditioning. Or, a senior citizen could get involved in a sport.

"Exercise should be a lifetime committment," she adds.

Water study set to begin

By Anne Erskine

The engineering firm of Camp, Dresser, McKee (CDM) will begin a $20,000 study of the town's watershed area next month.

At a meeting between CDM and the Watershed Area Protection Committee held last week, it was agreed that the following items would be included in that study: to define the per imeters of the watershed area, to evaluate developmental impact on the area, and to suggest those changes which should be made in the zoning bylaw to preserve the quality of the water supply.

The primary task accomplished by CDM will be the definition of the Watershed Area. The two-foot contour maps discussed as a priority by the committee at a previous meeting will not be included in the work scope. CDM representative Bob Weimar explained "The mapping we had proposed did not include going to the two foot scale . . . it's a useful tool, but as part of a bylaw it's not necessary.

Because of the accuracy and large scale of the two foot contour maps, combined with the naturally changing per imeters of the watershed area, the exact boundaries of the area could not always be represented on such maps. In some cases a wide line would be drawn to represent the area within which those boundaries would fall.

Committee member Peter Pratt supported Weimar, arguing that "Putting lines on a map that are subject to wide vagaries of interpretation would be digging a hole for ourselves."

Committee member Jack Hubbard suggested that the area be defined on maps with "identifying cultural references, for the purpose of convenience with the bylaw." The committee agreed on the disclusion of the contour maps from this study. They will however, seek additional funds to have them made at some time in the future.

The committee asked that in evaluating developmental impact on the area, CDM indicate all existent and potential pollution sources.

"To know where all of these hazards are," said Weimar, "would be a considerable effort. Existing sources will probably not have an effect on zoning bylaw changes."

Based on Weimar's argument, the committee agreed to come up with an inventory of these hazards.

In addition to these tasks CDM will work in conjunction with planning consultant Phillip B. Hare to provide the town with regulations and bylaws, as well as the means to implement them.

Also, a representative from CDM will meet with the committee once a month, and attend a town meeting. Jack Hubbard will be representing the committee to CDM.

The committee will meet on Friday night to review the final draft of the contract. They will vote at that time whether or not to accept the stipulations of the contract.

Milliken Field, harbc wharf, reviewed by Rec. Dept.

Cohasset's Recreation Commission passed a motion to support proposed changes to Milliken Field at a meeting Monday night.

These changes are supported by Deer Hill School principal Ken Ekberg and a group of concerned citizens, including members of the Boosters and Gridiron Club.

Included in the proposal are: the relocation of fields and surfaces, the expansion of the practice fields, the removal of the track to the area behind the high school, the addition of lights for the varsity fields, and the construction of bathroom facilities.

Relocation of the track and fields would allow them to be used simultaneously. Addition of lights to the varsity fields would allow for Friday night football games, leaving Saturday open for soccer. According to school officials, this would hopefully increase spectator attendance at both.

The commission was supportive of the proposal. "It's about time," said Member Alma Ekberg. "I wish they'd done it when I had kids in school."

According to commission member Peter Laugelle, supporters of the proposal have obtained three warrant articles for the annual town meeting.

Commission members also discussed Yankee Oil's proposal to build a 74-foot wharf in Cohasset Harbor.

Jim Gallagher suggested several reasons for opposing the plan. Among these were the size of the wharf, the removal of ten boat moorings, the possible damage to, or removal of the five lobster cars, increased traffic in the harbor, and the possible damage to lobsters from the silt stirred up during dredging.

"Cohasset Harbor is too small," said Gallagher, "to have a 74-foot boat going in and out of there in an area that lobster fishermen depend on."

According to Gallagher, Yankee Oil has already applied to the state for a permit to dredge. The company has yet, however, to meet with and gain the approval of the Planning Board. "They're just touching base by throwing all these plans around, and they've already gone for the state permits," he explained.

Gallagher also pointed out that when the company received approval from the Planning Board for the existing structures, they signed an agreement stating that they would not build any additional structures at the site. "I know," Gallagher noted, "that the Planning Board is going to give them a good hassle."

Also discussed at the meeting were the recreation director's annual report, budget increases, and facility permits.

According to the annual report of Recreation Director Jack Worley, the department generated a total of $30,344.50 during fiscal year 1984. Facility permit fees totaled $24,020.00 in 1984. This revenue is deposited in the town's General Fund and helps to offset the tax rate during the next fiscal year.

Worley emphasized the need for community input to

What's open, what's meeting on the holiday?

Tuesday marked the birthday of the late Martin Luther King. In his honor, the state declared a legal holiday.

That means that no municipal office buildings were open for business. Schools were closed, and government workers had the day off,

But regarding the scheduling of municipal night meetings, it depended on where you lived.

In Cohasset, a Tuesday night Conservation Commission hearing and an Advisory Committee budget review were duly posted and scheduled for Tuesday, January 15.

But Town Clerk Frances Marks noticed the discrepancy between the date and the holiday closing, and contacted the committee chairmen. On the advice of Town Counsel Richard Henderson, Marks was told there were to be no holiday meetings.

Henderson said that according to Chapter 136 Section 12, there should be no open municipal meetings held within a public office building when that building is closed to the public, such as a holiday. This problem has come up before, Henderson said, and he automatically refers to that section of the state law. Scheduling of the Tuesday night meetings this week was an oversight of the committee chairmen who failed to realize Jan. 15 was a scheduled holiday, he added.

In Scituate, Town Counsel Ed Ryan repeated the argument against municipal meetings on holidays. Saying his interpretation for the town was that no meetings would be held Tuesday, Ryan said interpretations are as varied as the attorneys who provide them.

Norwell's Town Counsel William Ohrenberger has decidedly different views of Chapter 136. As Atty. Ryan noted however, "it's not the first time I have disagreed with Bill."

Norwell's board meetings were on again, off again this week as officials tried to determine whether or not they could meet on holidays.

Town Clerk Lorraine Olsen said she called the Attorney General's office last week for an opinion about meeting on holidays and was referred to the Plymouth County District Attorney's office, which enforces the open meeting law for Norwell. She was told then that there was no problem meeting Tuesday night even though it was a holiday.

Figuerido denied

Parker Avenue resident William Figueriedo claims, "the town hasn't heard the last from me," after the zoning board again denied him a variance to keep a permanent trailer on his property.

Figueriedo, who was denied the variance by the board three weeks ago, said his lawyers are working on an appeal.

Figueriedo requested a variance to extend the initial six-month use of a trailer at 37 Parker Avenue to permanent use.

On April 29, he submitted a letter requesting the 35-foot trailer be allowed to remain at the site. A prior application and hearing on the matter was held in the summer of 1982, but because the decision was not filed with the town clerk's office within the statutorily-mandated period, the variance was granted by law.

The board was of the opinion that the judgment applied only to the relief sought in the prior application; the right to keep and live in a 35-foot trailer.

The current application is therefore confusing, the board stated in its decision, "since the applicant established through photographs and brochures that the trailer is approximately 14 feet by 75 feet." However, the members stated, the conclusions reached are unaffected by the size of the trailer at issue.

Nothing affects the applicant from constructing a structure upon this land in accordance with the bylaw. "What the applicant attempts to do through this application is to convert what originally was described as a temporary, seasonal facility to provide security to a boatyard into a permanent residence. His wife testified that she and other residents are living there illegally, using it as a permanent residence to establish voting rights in town," according to the written decision.

A variance is not in compliance with all sections of Sect 12.5 and the variance was denied by the board. No relief, they wrote, has ever been sought by the applicant under Section 9 of the bylaw. The applicant further suggests that his personal health is irrelevent to the standards for granting of relief requested.

"While we can be sympathetic to the applicant's personal situation, the personal health of the applicant is irrelevent to the standards for granting a variance," the members stated in the decision.

State Contracts

State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R) 3rd Plymouth District has announced the award of the contract for the restoration of Allerton Bluff in Hull. She has also been investigating the progress of a tidal gate at Straits Pond.

"SEA Engineering was awarded the contract effective Jan. 2, 1985, and preliminary work is scheduled in approximately two months," said Representative Murray.

The contract calls for an environmental impact as well as a cost effective method of resolving the erosion problems at Allerton Bluff in the Town of Hull.

Mary Jeanette said, "The contract also calls for SEA to develop viable alternative schematic designs. One thing I do not like in the contract calls for the consequences of a no-build situation".

Another one of Rep. Murrays priorities has been the installation of a new automatic tidal gate at Strait's Pond. "This has already taken too long for design and installation, and now it has been discovered that a concrete base must be placed at the location", said Rep. Murray.

An extra work order has been issued for this work. The boundries of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull, (Representative Murray's District towns) meet at the location where the gate will be installed. Rep. Murray obtained funds and legislation permission for the gate in a 1983 Capital Outlay Budget.

Union talks continue

Negotiations between the Cohasset Police Association and selectmen are continuing with another fact-finding session scheduled next week.

This will be the fourth session between the two sides in which a state arbitrator will act as an impartial participant in the contract negotiations. Each session costs the town $300.

The Fire Department, which is also working toward a contract settlement with the town, held a meeting with union members this week. Firefighters have said they do not expect a contract to be finalized soon.

According to the accountant's office, the town has expended $27,741 in contract negotiations and grievances for the past two fiscal years. And although $10,000 was budgeted this year for contract and grievances, as of December 31, $4203 had been expended. More than $23,000 had been spent prior to July 1, 1984 for negotiations and grievances.

Landfill Hours

The Cedar Street Landfill was closed Tuesday, Jan. 15 due to the Martin Luther King Day holiday. Consequently, the landfill will be closed on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

Hingham MV homicide

An East Street resident was killed late Saturday afternoon when she was struck by a pick up truck driven by a Cohasset man.

Mary C. MacNeil, 48, of 404 East St., Hingham, was pronounced dead at the scene by medical examiner Dr. Clifford Ward.

Hingham Officer John Norkaitis cited Dana J. Infusino, 20, of 399 North Main St., Cohasset, with speeding and motor vehicle homicide. Traffic Officer Robert Mansfield said Infusino was traveling along East Street near the Cohasset line and the recreation department's outdoor skating club when he saw MacNeil standing near the center line of the street. Infusino hit his brakes, sending the truck into a skid and a 180-degree turn. The right rear quarter of the truck struck MacNeil, sending her 80 feet along the street.

More cuts for '85 school budget

After another budget session Monday night, the FY 1986 school budget remains $17,538 over the figure recommended by the advisory committee.

Along with advisory member William Lean, the school committee once again reviewed numbers. This time budget totals were questioned, and administrators explained how the figures were calculated.

But after everything was said, the only miscalculation that was discovered was a duplicate submission of $600 for state athletic association dues.

It's back to the budget table next Monday night, as committee members, together with advisor Lean, attempt to pare down the numbers to a moderate sum. The school budget for next year currently stands at $4,208,873. The advisory committee recommended an increase of $126,000 over last year's $4,065,335 appropriation. Thus, the school department still has more than $17,000 to cut to get down to the advisors' recommendation.

Despite the disparity in numbers, the current total does not include any projected negotiated salary increases.

Monday night, advisory member Lean asked the committee how several budget totals were calculated. Although the increases between the proposed numbers and last year's appropriations are not significant, if some of the areas could be reduced, it could result in a moderate decrease in the budget total, he explained.

One of the first increases explained within the budget was the salary for the gifted and talented program director, Dorothy Wondolowski. Supt. Eugene Crowell, who said he has gradually viewed the success of this program, proposed the salary increase from a 40 percent staff member to an 80 percent position. The salary has been proposed at $18,605, he said, adding that he would like the program expanded further this year for the tenth grade class at the high school. Currently, Wondolowski coordinates the program at the Deer Hill School. Eventually, Crowell said, he would like a full time staff member for the program.

Supt. Crowell noted that a mandate for a gifted and talented program is included in the Governor's proposed Educational Reform bill. School Committee Chairman Joseph Nedrow said the latest information is that the Governor is about to appoint a commission to look into the proposed legislation.

Committee member Jack Langmaid said he was unsure whether some school activities should be included under a gifted and talented title, but could be accomplished as an afterschool activity, such as the Science Fair.

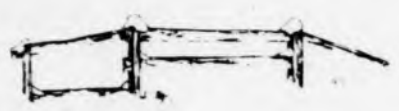
Another area which is increasing annually is the computer equipment account. Because of the continual need to purchase new software programs, the account grows each year.

Although Supt. Crowell emphasized the need to graduate computer literate youngsters, he asked whether the committee would prefer a $5000 budget moratorium in the computer equipment and replacement account. No decision was made regarding that suggestion.

Advisory committee member Lean asked the committee why there are no planned staff reductions when there is a enrollment decline in the junior/senior high school. Supt. Crowell said that teacher cuts were made last year, and the process has been to reduce every other year when the pupil enrollment has declined by 100 or more.

Lean questioned several account totals, while administrators explained the reason for the totals.

Contracted services for the high school will rise next year to $7100 from $3149 this year because of a fixed cost in the maintenance of hardware and software computer equipment. The high school administration supplies and materials account grew from $3000 to $12,750 next year. Asst. Supt. Stephen Hart explained that the uncontrollable hike in the cost of paper for the various copying machines, along with other ncessary supplies, makes this account difficult to control.



Lean also questioned the need for $1200 in the gifted and talented transportation account. Supt. Crowell said this amount is needed to transport the kids to a Saturday program at Massasoit Community College. The kids pay a tuition fee and give up their Saturdays to attend the special sessions, he added. Lean proposed that parents of these students might also be willing to pay the transportation costs, because of the privilege of attending the course.

Other expenses explained by the administrators were budget increases in the health education supplies account, bus supplies and maintenance, athletic coaches, contracted high school services and reconditioning in the athletic equipment account. The only duplication was a $600 Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association due, which was immediately spliced by the committee.

The school committee will meet Monday night to again review the proposed budget.

The Law and You

by Richard Price, Attorney-at-Law

DO-IT-YOURSELF DIVORCE?

In recent years, simplified separation and divorce procedures in many states have made it possible for some couples to dissolve their marriages on their own, without the aid of lawyers. "How-to" books exist that are keyed to individual states' laws. With the aid of the appropriate court clerk, it is possible to act for yourself. However, this is marginally practical and then only if the action is uncontested and if there are no disagreements over property, child custody or financial arrangements. All things notwithstanding, this initial savings of a lawyer's fee may not be a bargain later on. How can you be sure that you have dealt with all the assets and obligations that the two of you earned or incurred? If not, you may have to return to court to remedy the original settlement.

The field of law is one that can be quite complicated and is most often best left to professionals. If you are contemplating divorce it makes sense to make an appointment immediately with your lawyer. We know this is a particularly stressful time for all parties concerned and will do everything possible to ease the stress. LAW OFFICES OF RICHARD PRICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Rt. 3A, Cohasset, 383-9882. I am available daily by appt.

Be certain that you know who is responsible for luggage losses before leaving on a tour. This can often be a ticklish subject. Settlements can be delayed while the airline blames the tour operator and vice versa. The odds favor that there will be no problem but it pays to be safe. Also, ask about exclusions. Some carriers will handle canvas luggage only at the passenger's own risk. This means tha if it is destroyed, no compensation will be made and a special baggage-insurance policy would be appropriate. When flying on a charter, determine the carrier's baggage loss-or-damage policy and protect yourself accordingly.

Olympic gold medalist at dinner

On Friday evening, Jan. 25, members of the South Shore Mount Holyoke Club will have an opportunity to re-visit the 1984 Summer Olympics with Holly Metcalf, gold medalist in the U.S. Women's eight-person coxswain rowing competition.

Metcalf will speak about her experience as part of the U.S. Women's eight boat crew that swept to a dramatic first place finish in Los Angeles last summer.

An alumnae of Mount Holyoke herself, she is currently a physical education instructor and crew coach at the college. She will also talk about the athletic programs there, recently enhanced by an extensive new sports complex.

Mount Holyoke alumnae, husbands, friends, undergraduates and their parents will meet for dinner at the Cohasset home of Jacqueline Whipple. Beverly Smith and Natalie Eaton, both of Hingham, have organized cocktails and the potluck dinner, and Betty Tubman of Hull has served as liason in arranging for Holly Metcalf to come to the South Shore.

Glastonbury auction

We are doing it again — owing largely to the success of last year's auction, plans for the second Annual Glastonbury Abbey Auction are underway. This year's promises to be an even bigger hit than last. It will be held March 30 at 7 p.m. at the Hingham Armory on Central St., Hingham.

In keeping with the tradition of last year, the event will offer a wide assortment of items for bidding. There will be furniture, artwork, books, Cabbage Patch dolls, everything you could imagine — from ski weekends to catered brunches, from professional services to antigues, not to mention a whole slew of one-of-a-kind items. Everything but the kitchen sink.

The auction will benefit Glastonbury Abbey, a community of Benedictine Monks in Hingham. The monks celebrated their 30th anniversary last year and are looking forward to 30 more fulfilling years.

So, mark your calendars so you don't miss this year's auction. If you would like to donate anything, please contact Melissa or Janet at 749-2155.

Rec. Dept. budget. . .

"provide us with input as to types of programs they would like to see established, continued or discontinued." Those with suggestions should write, call, or stop in at town hall to discuss their ideas, he added.

In another matter, a vote of thanks to the School, Highway, Tree and Park, Water, Wire, and Library departments, as well as the numerous volunteers who have "made a number of programs possible that would not otherwise have been possible," was included in the Recreation Department's annual report.

The department's budget for 1986 represents an increase of $1020 from fiscal year 1985. This is primarily due to increases over which the department has no control such as phone service and electricity costs.

Remembering childhood games we once played

By Dorothy Squier

Maizie stood with her forehead against the trunk of an old maple tree, her arm crooked over her eyes, and intoned: "Five, ten, fifteen, twenty . . . " and on to one hundred, the words tripping over her tongue. The faster she counted the less time the players had to run and hide.

I ran to our "swing" maple, shinnied up the rope and climbed into the leafy branches, smug in my assurance that she'd never find me. I was right. She never did. When the game was over and they'd all gone home to supper, I slid down the rope feeling like an orphan.

"What can we do now? There's nothing any fun."

Mama always listened to our complaints and always had just the right suggestions. She bought us white clay pipes, the kind Papa smoked, and provided jars of soapy water. My sisters and I sat on the front steps blowing bubbles for hours. Or she gave us her out-of-date fashion magazines of May Manton's Patterns. We cut out paper dolls and backed them with cardboard so they'd stand. We designed and drew dresses, coats and hats and painted them with water colors, remembering to cut out the needed tabs on the sides and shoulders, and cut slits in the hats for their heads to go through. These two-dimension families were kept in shoe boxes or fancy chocolate boxes.

We played with dominoes, lining up the black pieces with the white dots, though I never learned how the game should be played. And there was always Parcheesi to fall back on.

For circle games there were several incantations we used for ocunting out to decide who would be IT. My favorite was:

Inty minty tippity fig,
Delia domma nomma nig,
Eye-cha bite-cha domma nite-cha,
Harm palm tusk,
Alicker balicker boo
Out goes Y O U!

Now if you were doing the counting and didn't like the result, you extended your chant, adding: "and you are out of this good G—A—M—E WHICH SPELLS GAME."

In one of our alternate chants the decision was left to God. It went:

"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven
All good children go to heaven.
When you get there God will say,
"Where's that book you stole that day?"
If yo say you do not know
He will grab you by the toe.
If you say that doesn't hurt
He will grab you by the shirt.
If you say you do not care
He will grab you by the hair.
If you start to yell and shout
He will say, "That's it! You're OUT!"

Then the last one left would be IT, which no one wanted to be. Except when we played "Walter, Walter Wildflower" and then I liked to be IT. Being of a romantic nature, I played the role to the hilt. The lyrics were melodramatic and unforgettable. While I stood in the middle, the players formed a circle and sang:

"Walter, Walter, wildflower, growing up so high,
We are all young ladies and we are sure to die.
Fie, Fie, Fie for shame!
Turn your back and tell your fella's name."
(At this point you murmured the name).
"Charlie Horan is a nice young man,
He comes to the door with his hat in his hand.
Down comes she all dressed in silk
With a rose in her bosom as white as milk.
She takes off her glove and shows her gold ring.
Tomorrow, tomorrow the wedding shall begin.
Charlie is sick and is going to die,
And that will make poor Dottie cry.
Dottie, Dottie don't you cry,
Charlie will be better bye and bye."

Having no bosom, I never knew quite what to do with the "rose," but I was content with the up-beat ending, and couldn't care less about my anatomy.

Our games were seasonal. Jump ropes and marbles appeared with the first robin. Lenny Flynn was the marble champ in our neighborhood. His mother sewed a long black stocking in the pocket of his knickers and at the end of each day that stocking banged heavily against Lennie's shins. He took on everyone, even little girls, and ended up owning most of the glassies and aggies on our street.

When darkness fell we ran home to a warm kitchen where lovely smells hovered over the supper table, all six daughters eagerly recounting the triumphs of the day. Homework, then off to bed in the attic where Mama had made a dormitory with cots for all except Liz. She was the oldest and had her own room downstairs.

Back to games, word games this time.

"I went to the grocery store and I bought A (or B, or whatever). We giggled and guessed. Ada always fell asleep first. She could sleep standing up.

Many years later I was reminded of this game when my guest and I went next door to view the extensive vegetable garden of my neighbor, Jim. He spoke with an Italian accent and made a game of asking us the names of his plants, saying, "You see them in the supermarket, you know what it is. See them in the ground you don't know."

My guest, herself a gardener, was knowledgeable until we came to one plant that puzzled her.

Jim was delighted. "Itsa beginna with A. Itsa beginna with A."

We guessed from apples to avocado.

Finally Jim cried, "Itsa A for Aiga-plant! Ha, Ha! You smart kids!"

Anchorman Mills speaks in Scituate

By Polly Magnetti

Nick Mills, anchorman for WEEI Newsradio, was guest speaker at the Scituate Chamber of Commerce meeting Monday evening, and he demonstrated a unique talent for yarnspinning, as well as discussing his background and news views.

A Maine native, Mills and his family have been Cohasset residents for several years. His wife, Heather, is president of a public communications firm and his daughters, Nichole and Sara attend school in Scituate.

He graduated from Boston University in 1964, served as a producer-director of educational television programs in the Peace Corps for two years, was an officer in the U.S. Army and commanded a combat photo unit in Vietnam for a year.

Mills also authored a book for Time-Life on combat photography.

Although his broadcasting experience began in Rockland, Maine when he was 14, Nick later returned to the radio as a news anchor for the ABC Radio Network in New York.

Returning to Boston at stations WITS and WHDH, he now can be heard weekday mornings between 6 and 10 a.m. on WEEI, Boston's only all-news station.

Mills told the captive audience at the chamber meeting several "Maine" stories during the evening. It is this characteristic which captures listeners' imaginations during his weekly radio report, "The Mills Report".

He commented that the special radio feature, "lets me look down country roads, the fringes of the news. I've come across wonderful people while doing this."

He also mentioned special reports which affected him personally, such as seeking out the original owner of the "African Queen", a barge used in a classic film by the same name starring Humphrey Bogart and Katherine Hepburn.

Mills found the owner in Florida and learned the man had purchased it in Africa when leader Idi Amin controlled the country.

Another important feature of the Mills Report led Nick to recall personal memories. While looking for a survivor of Pearl Harbor to be interviewed for Pearl Harbor day, Nick came up against one dead-end after another.

Then one day, while shopping at Stop and Shop in Cohasset, he pulled into the parking lot and noticed a car in front of his with a special license reading, "Pearl Harbor Survivor". Uncanny, but true.

After leaving a note on the man's windshield, and eventually meeting and interviewing him for the report, Mills began recalling some memories.

Nick was originally named after an uncle who participated in air shows in Squantum. It was at one such show, in 1934, where his uncle and a buddy were killed, because of an air accident.

When Nick was recalling this with the Pearl Harbor survivor, the man quietly recounted, "I know, I was your uncle's pallbearer." It is endless stories and chances that seem to make Nick Mills enjoy and excel at his work more.

"News is not what happens, it's word of events. We are telling you what is happening. News is information about things that already happen." He added even though the media's philosophy seems to be "if it bleeds it leads", not all sources encourage the blood and gore events daily, but rather real information.

He advised Scituate's business community to utilize advertising public relations, radio, television and newspapers to publicize their services and supplies. In order to compete with area-wide shopping malls, local businesses should, "have a uniformity of purpose and pool resources" to boost business and create success.

☐ Jeffrey Brown, son of Mr. and Mrs. Merle Brown of 546 Beechwood St., is a candidate for Eagle Scout, is undertaking a project that will be to everyone's benefit! Jeff got permission from the Selectmen to paint the back stage rooms in the town hall auditorium. Jeff, who is a senior at the High School, said the area is being readied for its conversion to headquarters for the town's Civil Defense Department. This project falls under the heading of Community Service Project, and should be done in about two weeks. Jeff is a member of Explorer Post 28.

☐ Congratulations go out this week to Christi Chamberlain, daughter of Tom and Leslie Chamberlain of King St. Christi, a sophomore at Simmons College who is majoring in finance and economics, has made the Dean's list for the first semester of the current year.

☐ June Simeone had a real exciting phone call last week, from Denver Colorado. That is where her son, Dana and wife Arlene are living. Scott Jason Simeone was born on Jan. 10, making it Dana and Arlene's second son (their first-born son is named Joshua). When I spoke to June last, she was busily painting a sign for Granddad Louis, to put in the front yard to announce the event. Wonder what Arlene's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brown who live in New Jersey, are planning to celebrate the "Big Event."

☐ A very happy birthday to "Pop" Larry Fone, who blew out eighty candles on his cake last weekend. That is a lot of candles, and the only way you would ever guess how old "Pop" is...he does more than most people do, even those half his age!

☐ Had a nice phone call from Connie Parker last week, filling me in on all of the goings-on at the Lothrop House. Connie thought it would be a good idea to let us know just what does happen there. There was a birthday party there recently held for Ruth (Mrs. Elmer) Pratt, of Gammons Road. To celebrate her 80th birthday, daughter Cynthia Persinger (from California) and Joel and Hope Pratt (from Pennsylvania) decided the perfect place to hold the party would be the Lothrop House. Mrs. Pratt has been a volunteer there since it came into being, from the Bicentennial Quilt, to all of the yard sales, etc. She is a real worker, according to Mrs. Parker. All of her family and friends had a marvelous time at the gala event!

☐ It is of note that all of the DAR meetings are held at the Lothrop House, on the second Wednesday of every month. The meetings are run under the leadership of Ann Pompeo, who is the regent of the Col. Thomas Lothrop Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The DAR also sponsored two Good Citizen awards...that is, two students, chosen by the teachers and their peers (members of the senior class). One of the awards was won by a Cohasset gal, Stacey Stobart. Congratulations on a grand honor indeed.

☐ On Jan. 10th, Mrs. Parker hostessed the Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America, with Ann Tolman (past state regent of the DAR, and past national librarian of the DAR) as her assistant hostess. It was a fish chowder luncheon. Mrs. Parker seems to take all of this work in her stride, but it certainly is work, and it is certainly putting Cohasset and the Lothrop House that several of the townspeople have worked so hard for on the map! She is the president of the Lothrop House, and our hats are off to her and all of her worthy deeds!!

☐ Ken and Alna Ekberg, Bruce and Lois Cameron, Peter and Dianne O'Loughlin, and Bob and Carol Ciciotte really outdid themselves this New Year's Eve. The rented the hall at the George H. Mealey Post and had a dual party . . . bring in the New Year and say good-bye to dear friends, the Fesslers. The Fesslers will be leaving Cohasset shortly, and will surely be missed by all . . . their efforts spent to make Cohasset a nicer place to live won't be forgotten, and we all thank you. Be sure to keep in touch!

☐ David Barrett of Cohasset will star as the Vicar in "See How They Run", a British farce by Philip King which opened Jan. 10 at Christo's II Dinner Theatre in Brockton.

Barrett, a familiar face to South Shore audiences, has often been seen in Cohasset Dramatic Club productions, including "A Man For All Seasons" and "Uncle Vanya". As a member of the Hingham Wayts and Players he has appeared in Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew" and "As You Like It".

Christo's II audiences will remember Barrett's performances in Darling Productions "Move Over Mrs. Markham" and "Shut Your Eyes and Think of England".

Barrett can be seen on stage Jan. 17, 18 and 19.

It really doesn't matter what your technique is, if there's ice in Cohasset, there's fun. Vickie Zerendow shows her children, Jessie, 2½ years and Alexis, 7, how to have fun, Cohasset style.

☐ SEMSBA auditions for the Sr. High comes to the High School this weekend, Jan. 19th. High School musicians will be coming from all over the South Shore to audition for the music festival, which is held in March. CHS had three representatives at the Sr. District Music Festival this weekend: Heather Davenport and Cynthia Conklin were chosen for the band, and Michelle Meagher was chosen for the chorus.

☐ Polly and Tom Doggett of 12 Hugh Strain Rd. are the proud grandparents of a baby girl, born Jan. 12 in San Diego to Dana and Christine Doggett. This is the second child for Dana and his wife. Tommy, 2½, was born in Provo, Utah, while Dana was a student at Brigham Young University. Dana has been a lifelong resident of Cohasset; his wife is from Cleveland, Ohio. The family will be returning shortly to Utah where Dana will resume his studies in Computer Science at B.Y.U. in the graduate division.

☐ Hats off to the cloak and dagger operatives who, under cover of darkness flooded the town common so that the kids could skate on smooth ice.

Cohasset school sports update

By Lisa Shumaker

Girls' Basketball

Wednesday, the girls were fired up and clobbered Scituate, 80 to 22. The entire team played tenacious defense and dominated the whole game. Coach Bill Fallon felt his team, "did a good job defensively with the full court press and half court traps." Offensively, Cohasset rarely had to set up, running the fast break better than any other game this season.

The Skippers were led offensively by high scorers Tracy Fitzpatrick with 18 points and Janet DiGorolamo with 12 points. Carla Lucas and Sarah Seavey also had good scoring games as each one checked in with 10 points apiece.

Cohasset traveled to Sandwich Friday and lost in a game that went down to the buzzer. With only seconds remaining and the score tied at 53, a Sandwich player sank the winning freethrow and handed the Skippers their second loss of the season. "The girls played hard," according to Fallon, "but unfortunately made too many crucial mistakes which came back to haunt us in the final minutes of the game."

The Skippers' high scorers were Tracy Fitzpatrick, who had 20 points, and Carla Lucas, who had 10 points. Cohasset has been looking to Tracy all season and she did not let them down Friday, having an exceptional game on both ends of the court. Anne O'Leary also turned in a good effort for the Skippers.

Next week, Cohasset will travel to Rockland on Wednesday, which will undoubtedly end up in a very tough and physical game. Friday, the girls play East Bridgewater, a team not expected to give them too much trouble.

Wrestling

Wednesday, the boys went to Norwell and beat their opponents, 39 to 23. Cohasset was forced to forfeit two weight classes which immediately put them behind by 12 points. This disadvantage put tremendous pressure on the young Cohasset team. However, the Skippers rose to the occasion and came through with a victory.

Ricky Roarke and Brian Leary led the Skippers with victories which bettered their individual records to 4-0. Paul Froio and Glen Froio, in their first varsity matches also beat their opponents. Despite moving up in their weight classes, both John Riley and John Froio were victorious. James Dillan picked up his first pin of the season. Doug Bennet also won to round out the list of Cohasset victories for the evening.

Although he lost his match, Peter Buckley, by not giving away a pin, saved some valuable points for the Skippers. Jim Staunton has also been wrestling well all season against some very stiff competition. Coach Torin Sweeney has been very impressed with the efforts of these two boys.

Next week Cohasset wrestles Scituate Wednesday and travels to the Cape Saturday to take on both Cape Cod Tech. and Franklin. Sweeney feels if his team wrestles to their potential, and keeps up their enthusiasm, they have a good chance of winning all three matches.

Gymnastics

Tuesday, the girls traveled to Hanover and were beaten, 111.1 to 91.15. This score reflects much improvement over last year, for during the previous season Cohasset never scored over 80 points the entire season. Coach Andrea Palardy was very pleased with the efforts of her team and was happy to see such a major improvement over last year so early this season.

Jane DeLima led the Skippers in every event and place second overall in the meet. Julia Sechen, Liz Buckley, and Mary Beth McNamara all performed well for the Skippers.

Monday, Cohasset will take on Norwell and hope to continue improving as the season progresses.

Ice Hockey

Wednesday, Cohasset skated to an 8 to 8 tie with Duxbury. Coach Richard Izzo was pleased with his team's performance and felt they skated well throughout the entire contest. Izzo was also optimistic about Cohasset's offense and felt it was good to score some goals.

Troy Chatterton led all scorers with four goals, while Todd Fitzpatrick picked up a pair. Danny Curran was also cited by Izzo as having a good game.

Saturday, the Skippers lost to the most powerful team in the league, Scituate, 7 to 2. Izzo felt Cohasset played admirably and was impressed with the way they came on strong in the last two periods.

Kevin Leary, in his best game yet, picked up a goal, while Todd Fitzpatrick scored Cohasset's only other goal. Philip Mahoney turned in a good effort for the Skippers as well.

This week Cohasset plays Abington, Tuesday, at 10 a.m. and Hull, Wednesday, at 6 p.m. Friday, the Skippers travel to Sandwich and face off at 3 p.m.

Boys Basketball

The respected rematch between the Scituate and Cohasset boys basketball team didn't pan out to a nailbiting affair.

Cohasset used a balanced scoring attack from center Jim Creed, and David MacDonald, Brian Edward and Phil Bernstein to defeat Scituate 75-50 in South Shore League play.

All this came as Cohasset's star guard Tony Bogarty only scored six points as he was in early foul trouble and nursed a severly bruised thigh.

Creed scored 12 points, blocked 12 shots and had 19 rebounds to lead the way. MacDonald scored 11, Bernstein, 13 and Edwards added 11 points.

Cohasset never trailed and they improved their record to 6-0. The Skippers jumped out to a 12-4 lead five minutes into the game and upped to a 24-8 margin.

The Skippers turned a ten point 28-18 lead into a 37-20 lead at halftime and built a 61-31 lead by the end of the third quarter.

Eric Svensen scored 13 points, Steve Freiter added 12 and Paul Considine chipped in with eight points for Scituate.

Later in the week, Cohasset jumped to its ninth straight victory with a 76-36 win over Sandwich. The Skippers wasted no time as they jumped to a 20-1 first period lead behind Tony Bogarty's 20 points in the first half. He scored 25 points and finished with 14 assists.

Edwards scored 15 points and had eight rebounds and David MacDonald chipped in with 14 points and six steals.

Unfortunately for Scituate, the end of the week didn't get better as they lost a 70-69 squeaker to Hanover. Scituate's record now stands at 5-3.

Considine scored 20 points for the Sailors and Steve Freiter added 13 points. Hanover led 38-37 at halftime and 54-52 after three quarters. Scituate battled back to tie the game in the fourth quarter.

It's a pin for a Cohasset wrestler as he completes a match against a Norwell opponent.

The referee and a Cohasset wrestler see eye to eye on a decision for the Cohasset wrestling team (and against a crushed opponent.)

School committee briefs

Resignation accepted

The school committee accepted with deep regret the resignation of Helen Pratt, the physical education instructor at the Osgood School. The resignation, effective Feb. 1, became necessary, she stated in a letter to the committee, because continued activity "will jeopardize my health and my teaching position if I return in April."

Music teacher appointment

The school committee unanimously voted to appoint Steven Shirosky Jr. high school music instructor, replacing Jeff Dodge who will leave the system in February.

Shirosky was one of two finalists for the position. A graduate of Eastern Nazarene College with a Bachelor of Science in Music Education, Shirosky also plays the trumpet.

He is currently employed at State Street Bank, and has indicated it will not be a problem for him to leave that job for the Cohasset position in February. He was a teacher intern at Hanover Junior High School during college.

Crowell said his former associates and administrators praised the young musician. He said a professional evaluation will be made after this school year. School committee members agreed that the new teacher should be accepted into the system with enthusiasm.

Sabbatical leave granted

The school committee unanimously voted to approve a year's sabbatical leave to Osgood teacher Christine Collins.

Collins, who has a Master's degree in administration, will be working towards a Certificate of Advanced Graduate studies in elementary education curriculum. This is a pre-Doctorate program offered in several Boston-area colleges. Collins has been a teacher in the Cohasset system for 14 years.

No pistol practice

On the advice of Asst. Town Counsel John Slater, the school committee reluctantly refused a request to use the pistol range located in the basement of the Osgood School.

About two months ago, Robert Appleyard requested permission for the Cohasset Rifle and Gun Club to use the facility for supervised target practice. A few years ago, an unsupervised resident used the pistol range and shot through a water pipe. The accident was never reported to town officials until the principal discovered the leak the following day. The range was then closed to anyone except Cohasset police officers.

Appleyard approached the school committee, and requested permission for the club members to use the facility under strict supervision. It is the best indoor facility in the South Shore, he told them.

In a letter written to the committee, Atty. Slater said according to General Laws Chapter 258, the Tort Claims Act, if the committee were to allow unsupervised use of the range "and a person was injured by one of the people using the pistol range, a tort claim could be maintained against the town for damages. Under the Tort Claims Act, we recommend the town not subject itself to potential liability for damage claims by allowing unsupervised use of the pistol range in an elementary school," Slater concluded.

Based on his recommendation, the committee voted unanimously to deny use of the facility to the gun club. Cohasset police officers continue to utilize the range for target practice.

School news

Attendance Policy

As the second semester is ending, it is a good time to review the attendance policy. Parents should be aware of the serious consequences which result from ignorance or neglect in complying with the stated rules.

A parent must notify the school attendance office each morning of a student's absence. On the day of the student's return to school, parents must provide the attendance office with a written and signed note explaining the absence.

Failure to do this will result in a zero ("0") for classes until the note is received. At exam time an unexcused absence could wreak havoc with grades. "A word to the wise...."

On the elementary level, for the safety of younger students, parents should call the school office early in the morning of a child's absence so that the absence may be varified.

Kindergarten registration

Children who will be five years old on or before Dec. 31, 1985 will be eligible to enter kindergarten in September.

The week of Jan. 21 registration will be conducted at the Osgood School on Ripley Road. A birth certificate must be presented at the time of registration if the parents were not residents of Cohasset at the time of the child's birth.

Please call Principal Jack Creamer at 383-6117 if you have any questions about enrollment.

Changeover for current kindergarteners

Guest Speaker

Peter J. O'Loughlin, Jr. of 65 Forest Ave., Cohasset, an attorney with Aetna Life and Casualty Company, was a guest speaker at Mr. Edward F. Sheehan's Senior Elective Law class recently. Mr. O'Loughlin, who is a graduate of Northeastern University and Portia Law School, has had wide experience in many facets of the law. During the one-hour class, he went into detail about the training and duties of lawyers. He stressed the point that "the law affects us every day in many ways." He went on to highlight the point that to be a lawyer a person must "learn to read and love it." When asked by the students about the prime quality of a lawyer, he remarked that "basically every trial lawyer must learn, like a professional actor, to be a performer."

Mr. O'Loughlin asserted that "it is the lawyer's primary task to resolve a problem." To be able to keep up with the hundreds of new laws, he said that "continuing education is essential for the aspiring new lawyer."

He discussed many of the cases he has participated in. During his presentation he frequently turned to the assembled students to ask them to define key legal terms or to answer such questions as; "what would you have done under this situation?"

Lastly, Mr. O'Loughlin recommended that any students who are interested in pursuing legal careers "take liberal arts courses to get a firm general foundation." He urged them to read a lot and learn to write effectively.

The other senior elective course offered the first semester this year is Introductory Psychology. Instructor for this course is Ms. Joan Robbins.

Additions to Dwyer & Mullin

Robert J. Mullin, president of Dwyer & Mullin ERA Realtors, has announced the addition of four sales associates to the 11-year-old Cohasset firm. In recent months, Kathy Donahue, Joyce H. Farrell, Ada Kahl, and Chris Hickman, all of Scituate, have joined Dwyer & Mullin's staff, bringing the agency's sales force up to 14 full-time real estate professionals.

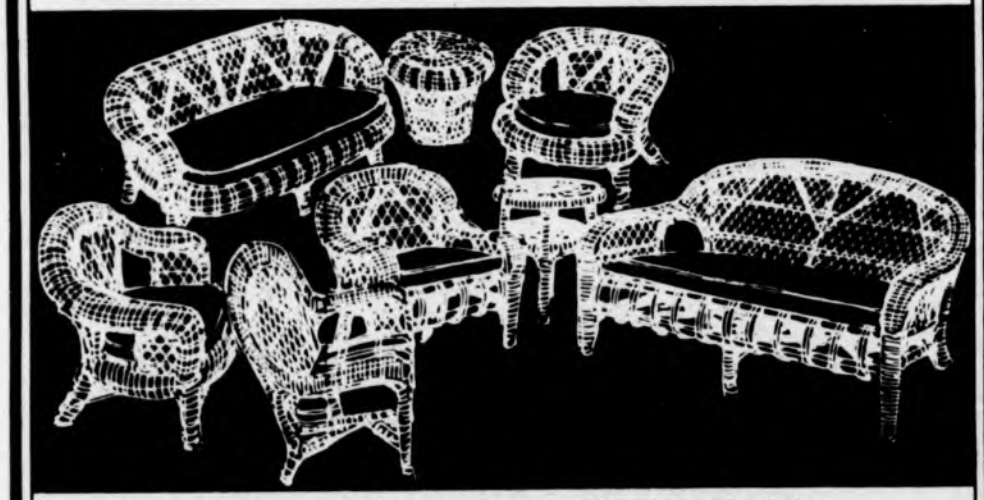
Kathleen Donahue, a graduate of Archbishop Williams High School in Braintree and of Trinity College in Washington, D.C., has completed Course I of the Realtors Institute of Massachusetts. Mrs. Donahue is active in civic affairs in Scituate and has chaired several committees for the Junior League of Boston's Decorator Show House. She and her husband David live at Cushing Landing with their three children.

Joyce H. Farrell of Manor Road has also completed Course I of the Realtors Institute. A graduate of Endicott College, Mrs. Farrell worked for IBM before beginning her career as a real estate salesperson. The Farrell family belongs to the Scituate High School Football Boosters Club and Mrs. Farrell is a member of P.E.O., an international organization that sponsors and supports educational opportunities for women. Mrs. Farrell, her husband, Hugh, and the couple's two children ski at Sugarloaf Mountain in Maine where sons Jeff and Chip are on the Junior Ski Patrol.

Ada Kahl of Pheasant Hill Drive is the most recent addition to Dwyer & Mullin's staff. A graduate of Oberlin College, Mrs. Kahl is a member of Scituate's Choral Arts Society and a volunteer for Scituate Health Service, Inc., where she initiated and ran several local stop smoking programs in cooperation with the American Cancer Society. Mrs. Kahl and her husband Don are members of Hatherly Country Club where Ada is an enthusiastic participant in the women's golf program.

Christine Hickman has recently relocated in Scituate after living in California for 10 years. Ms. Hickman, who lives on Bridge Avenue, attended Scituate schools and Cabrillo College in California. She has completed an ERA training course for new real estate salespersons.

In October of 1984, Dwyer & Mullin moved to new and expanded offices at 812A Chief Justice Cushing Way (Rte. 3A), just north of the Scituate/Cohasset border.



Hunneman and Co. Inc. Better Homes and Gardens recently held an Open House in celebration of its first year. Participating in the celebration were (left to right) Liz Murdy, manager; Oliver Woodruff, Ruth Woodruff, Barbara Froio.

Second Congregational Church

Elevator Progress Report - In the Trustees' meeting, Chairman Wayne Sawchuk announced that nearly all of the preliminary work to prepare for building the elevator shaftway has been completed. Visible results, in addition to the hole already cut through the ceiling of the Nursery, are scheduled to appear in the next two weeks, in accordance with the construction dates given to the Church Committee in Dec. The shaftway, built to the exacting specifications of the elevator supplier, must be completed before the elevator itself is installed. The elevator is expected to be complete and operating by the end of March, so that on Easter Sunday (April 7) we should all be able to celebrate the conclusion of a successful major project.

Elevator Fund Report - Richard Silvia, Elevator Fund Coordinator, announced at the same meeting that response to the Elevator Project has been gratifying. The contributions which have been given or pledged, however, have so far come from only a few more than half of the church's member families. With the building of the elevator now under way, it is hoped that those who have not yet pledged or contributed will do so. It would be good to have 100 percent participation in giving to support this effort of our church to improve its accessibility for older or handicapped persons. If you want to pledge or contribute, or if you want additional information, please call Richard at 383-0500.

Confirmation - The Confirmation Class will meet Sunday, Jan. 20. Please be here for the Church Service and meet in Rev. Benbow's office at 11:15. HELP NEEDED - For our meal Jan. 20 we need the help of 2 or 3 volunteer parents willing to provide a casserole or dessert. Please call Rev. Benbow (383-0345 or 383-6697) if you can help. Thanks.

Best Wishes, Fesslers - Dick and Marilyn Fessler are moving to Florida this month after several years of active participation and service. Thank you, Dick and Marilyn, for your work and friendship, and best wishes in your new home.

Choir Note - Have you considered joining the choir? How about this week? Your voice and presence is needed—just "come on down" Wednesday nights at 7:30 in Bates Hall. You will be more than welcomed!

Clothing Drive - Warm winter clothing is always needed by agencies who distribute it to needy, sometimes homeless, people. Our Board of Deacons requests that you donate clothing by Jan. 27 for distribution by the Quincy Crisis Center. Especially needed are warm outer wear, socks, sweaters, blankets and boots. Clothing is needed for men, women and children.

Notes of Thanks - Recent notes of thanks have come from Pilgrim Church, Dorchester, for your gifts of food at Thanksgiving; and from the Coastline Council for Children and the Quincy Crisis Center, for the Christmas presents for children. Your generosity is appreciated.

First Parish

Parish News —

Circle Dinners — The second Circle Dinner will take place the weekend of Jan. 25-26. If you have not already signed up, there's still time to make plans for a delicious meal with church friends.

You may host the dinner at your home, providing wine and hors d'oeuvres, or provide a casserole, salad or dessert. Singles and couples are most welcome.

Please call Karin Bartow, 383-0572, if you wish to sign up. You can also leave your name at the church office, 383-1100, but try her first as she will coordinate the dinners.

Music Notes — One more left-over Christmas note! It was good to have our boarding school members back with us over the holidays. Thanks for coming, Chip Bliss and Jennie Packard.

This week we're separating the men from the women, doing anthems written specially for the different voice groupings, and especially beautiful ones, at that. Each is extracted from a larger work intended for mixed chorus, and each is composed by a twentieth century author given to using melodies either drawn from or in imitation of traditional folk literature. The Randall Thompson piece is a setting of Robert Frosts' "Stopping by woods on a snowy evening," and the Vaughan Williams' selection uses the text "Sweet was the song the Virgin sang."

Skating class

A touching exchange of both caring and skill has begun to take place every Monday morning at the Cohasset Winter Gardens. In response to a plea for weekly volunteers, Clark Chatterton, Cohasset athletic director, has organized a group of high school students to join the Early Special Needs' ice skating class.

Each high school volunteer is paired with a special needs student for the 45-minute lesson. The children are being taught the basics of skating including balancing, warm-up exercises, movement on the ice and stopping. Of course a great deal of fun is thrown in for good measure. This week's volunteer group included four of Cohasset's varsity hockey team: Troy Chatterton, Dan Curran, Todd Fitzpatrick and Kevin Leary. Each week a new group will join the class.

Special thanks to Ruth Nedrow and Clark Chatterton for organizing this very special volunteer program.

Special Winter Olympics

The thrill of Olympic competition will soon be in the town of Cohasset as our athletes gear up for the 1985 Winter Games. The Eastover Resort in Lenox, Massachusetts, will again host the annual event. This year over 300 athletes from across the state will demonstrate their skills in Alpine and Nordic Skiing, Speed Skating, Figure Skating and Floor Hockey competition.

Two to three Cohasset athletes will compete in the junior division Speed Skating event. Their events include time trials and a 75 meter race.

Each athlete must be eight years-old and must clock at least 10 hours of training. The town of Cohasset has developed a strong training program with the assistance of C.H.S. athletic director Clark Chatterton. A group of dedicated high school students, many from the ranks of our varsity hockey team, volunteer one hour a week to provide training and support to our special athletes. This program allows each participant to reach his maximum potential in their sport.

The Cohasset team is sponsored again this year by the Cohasset Rotary with special funds provided by our head coach, Peter Breen, at the Cohasset Winter Gardens. Transportation, uniforms and entry fees will be funded by these community resources.

Winter courses for conservatory

private instruction on all instruments at all levels of proficiency, taught by the all-professional faculty.

Among the classes for children are:

—The Joy of Music for ages four to seven; an introduction to the world of music through song, rhythmic movement and playing special Orff instruments;

—Suzuki training on violin and piano and a special Suzuki playing class;

—Ballet, creative dramatics, recorder class and the children's choir (Kinderchor).

Adults can get rid of the winter blues by taking private instrument or voice lessons. There are also special voice classes for beginning and advanced pupils in the evening with Peter Edwards. Other adult classes include: ballet, jazz dance, Acting Workshop, chamber music ensembles and jazz ensembles.

And Judy Hardy's course on Mozart, which began during the first semester, continues under the title "More Mozart." It's not necessary to have attended the first session to join in the fun of studying the "most perfect" musician ever. All are welcome to attend a birthday party celebrating Mozart's 229th birthday Sunday, Jan. 27 at 4 p.m. There will be a sampling of Mozart's music by a variety of musicians and a Mozart torte to be sampled.

The second semester begins the week of Jan. 28. Information about schedules and registration procedures are available by calling the conservatory office at 749-7565. Or call for a free brochure describing the conservatory's programs.

The South Shore Conservatory of Music is funded in part by a grant from the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Aid for famine relief

Thayer Academy students raised almost $1,000 to help Oxfam America in its efforts for famine relief in Africa. Students participated in a "hunger banquet" whch dramatized the daily hardships faced by much of the world's population.

The Thayer Community Council is planning a spring marathon in which students, teachers, alumni and friends will participate to raise more money for famine relief. James McDonough, Dorchester, president of the Thayer Community Council, and Gary Carlson, Cohasset, vice-president of the council, are the leaders of the drive.

Committee blasts 'false' budget information

School committee members lambasted fellow member Martha Gjesteby for submitting "false information" to the public about her proposed $167,000 school budget reductions.

Last week Gjesteby presented the committee, the advisory committee, and the press, with a list of proposed cuts she determined would save the school system $167,701.

But under close scrutiny this week by committee members, those budget reductions appear less significant. Numerous decreases in several budget accounts which Gjesteby included in her proposed list had already been deducted from the 1985-1986 budget, or had no real effect on the proposed financial picture for next year, according to Supt. Eugene Crowell.

In his summary of the Gjesteby proposal, Supt. Crowell determined that the most that could be spliced from the proposed $4,208,873 budget would be "$10,000 not $167,000."

Nine thousand dollars would be cut from the budget under Gjesteby's proposed administrative supplies account, he said. But there would be no savings from a proposal to deny a fulltime elementary health educator because that had never been included in the proposed FY86 budget. In addition, no monies would be saved from her recommendation to increase efficiency within the school administrative staff, he added.

Gjesteby's proposal to investigate several possible high school staff reductions is an item that the school committee must first agree upon in executive session, the superintendent noted.

"That's the big thing," he told the committee. "If we are going to reach an accord with the advisory committee,we've got to talk negotiations and we have to set guidelines and go to the advisors and get to some reasonable percentage of increase. Then you can decide if there's going to be any cuts." The committee agreed that staff reductions is an issue to be reviewed with the junior/senior high school administrators at a future budget session.

Currently, the school budget for next year has been trimmed to $4,208,873. That is $85,000 less than the total budget proposed by the superintendent a few weeks ago at the first budget review meeting. It remains $17,000 greater than the $4,065,335 total recommended by the advisory committee.

Last week Gjesteby, in a move to consolidate efforts to decrease the budget, presented her individualized list of proposed cuts. School committee members reacted angrily to her presentation, saying she should have discussed the list with her fellow members before submitting it for public perusal.

A look at the local races

It's early in the race, but there are a couple of people who have declared intentions to toss their hats into the local political arena.

The municipal election will be held April 13. Candidates have until February 27 to file nomination papers with the Town Clerk. The fifty signatures necessary to run for public office must be certified by the Board of Registrars by March 1.

There is a vacancy in one three-year term for selectman. That position is currently occupied by Rocco Laugelle. He has yet to formally notify the Town Clerk of his intent to run, and has not indicated if he will seek re-election. No one has yet to file a notice of intent for the position.

There are two positions open on the school committee, currently filled by Joseph Nedrow and Martha Gjesteby. Nedrow said although he has yet to file notice, he has decided to seek re-election to the three-year term. Gjesteby said she will "probably" follow the same course and take out the necessary papers at a later time.

They will have competition from George Marlette III, who has filed his notice with the Town Clerk. Marlette, who is the junior high school soccer coach, a member of the School Facilities Committee, and an election officer, said he is seeking election based on the same issues he stressed during a campaign waged a year ago. The elimination of "crisis management approach" is one important issue he will raise during this campaign, he said.

The Board of Health has one three-year vacancy which is currently filled by Marilyn Sweeney. She has not filed a notice of intent with the Town Clerk's office. There has been no formal notification by any interested resident.

There is a five-year Planning Board seat up for grabs this year. Incumbent John O'Toole has not yet filed a notice of intent and there has been no other papers filed with the Town Clerk.

Water Commissioner Lot E. Bates has filed his notice of re-election to the three-year position.

He will have a challenger in Peter Laugelle, the Tree and Park Superintendent.

Raimond Vanderweil Jr., who was appointed to fill a vacancy on the Sewer Commission, has filed official notice with the Town Clerk. Vanderweil was appointed to fill the remaining term of former commissioner Joseph Gwinn, who resigned last summer.

Other local offices which are open for the April election include: a five-year Recreation Commission membership, currently held by James Gallagher; a four-year unexpired term on the Housing Authority; three three-year terms on the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Board of Trustees. The three incumbents, Nancy Gilman, David Chittim and Elizabeth Eaton have yet to file notification with the town. There is also a one-year term for the position vacated by Richard Drabowski earlier this year; a two-year unexpired term for Treasurer-Collector. Elizabth Ripley, who was appointed to fill the vacancy in that office, has filed notice that she will run for the elected position; a three-year term on the Board of Assessors is also vacant. Incumbent Michael Patrolia has not notified the Town Clerk of his intention to run for re-election.

Figueiredo files suit against ZBA

William Figueiredo, who was denied a variance to use a trailer at 37 Parker Avenue as a permanent residence, has filed suit against,the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The suit, which requests the decision be annulled, was filed in Norfolk County Superior Court Jan. 14, four days after Figueiredo was ordered to cease occupancy in the trailer. Building Inspector Edward Poskus ordered the trailer owner to cease occupancy, based on the variance denial issued by the zoning board two weeks earlier.

The Zoning Board of Appeals denied a variance to Figueiredo to extend the six-month use of a trailer at 37 Parker Avenue to permanent use.

In the complaint filed by Attorney Walter Sullivan of Scituate, it is stated that "the Decision (of the Zoning Board of Appeals) exceeds the authority of the Defendants and is arbitrary and capricious and fails to acknowledge the rights granted by the prior proceedings and the judgment of the Superior Court."

Atty. Sullivan is referring to a court order issued December 2, 1982 which granted Figueiredo the right to maintain and live in his home trailer from May 1 to October 31 of each year. The court decision was handed down because of the inability of the zoning board to make a decision on the variance request within the statutorily-designated time limit.

The Parker Avenue resident applied October 30, 1984 for a special permit to extend the use of the trailer from the six-month period to year-round. The board denied that request earlier this month.

According to the complaint filed by Atty. Sullivan, "Figueiredo is the only property owner in Cohasset whose use of his property is subject to a period of annual use limitation."

Figueiredo demands "that the court restrain the Defendants and their agents from interfering with the Plantiff's use of the premises for residential purposes." In addition, "that the court enjoin until a final determination on the merits, the Defendant's and their agents from interfering with the Plaintiff's use of the premises for residential purposes."

In addition, Figueiredo requests that the zoning board decision of this month be annulled and "for such further relief as appears meet and just."

Remembering Gilbert Tower

Uncovering a page of Cohasset's past

By Jane Lane

It was a moment of Cohasset's past - uncovering an event of long ago. Like the turning of a page in a history book. It was an unanticipated discovery, like so many before it and so many still untouched.

It was during the mid 1960's that Arnold Weeks was hoisting himself atop a ladder into the bellfry of the First Parish Meeting House. His companions, Peter Cumner, Danforth Lincoln and Arnold Paine, were members of the Unitarian Church maintenance committee. It was their responsibility to care for the aging town clock, embedded into the steeple of the church meeting house.

One day, as they approached the top of the bellfry, perched atop a ladder, they found an old, weathered piece of unpainted wood. Explains Weeks, "it looked as though it may have come from a piece of a discarded pew from the church. But there it was, nailed to the wall of the steeple."

It wasn't so much the three-foot piece of wood that they found interesting, nor the way in which it was affixed to the wall. It was the deep scars that were carved into the surface of this slab of wood, and the lead markings imprinted onto the pine.

The most prominent etching was found at the top of the plank in legible writing, accomplished with a distinctive flair. Instantly, Weeks recognized its author, and before he found the attached signature.

"G.S. Tower Ringing the bell for Dewey's victory at Manila. May 7, 1898." The signature publicly revealed what Weeks automatically suspected - this was the handiwork of Gilbert Tower. He was 13 years old at the time.

"Actually, the victory at Manila was during the week preceding the date inscribed on the wood," Weeks notes, "but it was probably the first time Gilbert could get up there to ring the bells." An occasion, Weeks adds, that typified the actions of one of Cohasset's most prominent citizens, the late Gilbert Tower.

Strangely enough, he adds, although Tower and he became good friends in later years, Weeks never asked Gilbert why he had inscribed the words there. "I just forgot to ask him, I don't know how I did. But I always knew it was authentic because Gilbert had such a sense of history. It would have been just like Gilbert at 13 years old to get up there and ring the bells and then

Cohasset's week . . .

Yankee Oil float

The Cohasset Harbor Committee recommended to selectmen that the Yankee Oil Co. not be allowed to install a proposed 74-foot float in the harbor.

The committee met Jan. 10 to review plans presented by representatives of Yankee Oil Co. to install a float between their land and the Cohasset Yacht Club. The representatives told committee members in December that no specific boat, nor length of boat is currently under consideration by the company.

Based on the December meeting with Yankee Oil, the harbor committee recommended that the float not be allowed within the harbor for the following reasons: the 74-foot float must have sufficient area for boats to approach and leave the float under adverse conditions; there is no room in the harbor for relocating the lobster cars and boats that would be displaced; there are unknown effects about the change in silting that could result from the proposed dredging and subsequent operations around the float.

The committee suggested to selectmen that if the recommendation is accepted, selectmen should notify the Army Corps of Engineers and the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Quality Engineering and the Massachusetts Division of Waterways which are currently reviewing the float proposal.

It was noted in the December hearing that if the Harbormaster denies permission to install the float, Yankee Oil can immediately appeal the decision to Massachusetts Division of Waterways where an official hearing will be held.

The Fire Department was given two resuscitation mannequins this week by the Cohasset Chamber. Dan Leahy, president of The Chamber, makes the presentation with Joe Quinn, executive vice president of The Chamber, to Fire Capt. James Lee Gurry, EMT coordinator. (Foley)

Oil industry interested in Georges Bank drilling

The petroleum industry retains "a high interest" in drilling on Georges Bank if some of the more desirable tracts deleted earlier are restored in a future sale, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Petroleum Council told the Cohasset Rotary Club this week.

Rodger A. Salman, an area manager for Texaco U.S.A., said oil companies did not submit a single bid for the last sale in September because the most promising tracts had been deleted. An earlier sale resulted in eight dry holes in 1981 and 1982.

"More than one-half of the oil and gas yet to be found in this nation lies offshore," declared Salman. "We wish to drill in deeper waters, in different locations, and we can certainly do so without harming marine life or the ecosystem.

"We believe we can find enough natural gas in the Georges Bank area to supply all of New England for several decades and enough oil to produce the equivalent of what Massachusetts motorists would require for 20 years or more," said Salman. "But we can't know for certain, and will never produce a drop, unless we are allowed to drill."

The speaker reported that many technological advances on offshore rigs have minimized the risk from drilling, and companies must comply with three dozen environmental laws, secure 17 major permits and comply with 74 sets of regulations.

Mannequin donation

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce purchased two mannequins to be used for cardiopulmonary resuscitation training (CPR) and has donated the mannequins to the Cohasset Fire Department.

One mannequin is an adult male; the other is a baby. These will be used in CPR training aids for the emergency medical technicians. Fifteen of the departments twenty-four fire fighters are EMTS.

The two mannequins will be loaned to the Cohasset Community Center and the Cohasset Public Schools for CPR training.

The Cohasset Chamber covered the full cost of $670 for these two new mannequins which replaced a mannequin the town had been using for several years. James Lee Gurry, EMT coordinator for the Cohasset Fire Department stated that the mannequin which the town had was barely usable and needed to be replaced. He reported that the town did not have the money to purchase a replacement and cited that the alternative method would be to rent a mannequin from the American Red Cross. This would have entailed a substantial expense to the town annually..

Dan Leahey said, "We had asked our membership to list some of the town's needs at the September monthly meeting." The Chamber learned of the need for new mannequins and contacted Captain Gurry to find out his requirements. He requested either an adult mannequin or an infant mannequin.

"It became evident that the town had a critical need for a new mannequin and at our November meeting, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce voted to honor 100 percent of the department's request," responded Leahey.

Captain Gurry expressed his appreciation to the Chamber for this donation and said that it will help better to prepare his fire fighters to meet the needs of the community.

Police and fire budgets up/down

Selectmen voted Monday night to recommend increases for clerical services in the 1986-87 police and fire department budgets.

Police and Fire Chiefs Joseph Kealy and Martin Dooley discussed their needs for secretarial help with selectmen last Wednesday. The board asked at that time that Kealy and Dooley look into the costs of such services and find out how many secretaries were hired by police and fire departments in neighboring towns. Both agreed to provide this information at last night's meeting.

Chief Kealy reported that no other police department in the area lacks clerical help. Selectmen agreed that Cohasset's department should be provided with the same.

"It's time you had the clerical assistance," said ex-chief of police John DeBassio. He moved to include a classification for full-time secretarial services to the personal services account in the sum of $12,667. The motion passed unanimously.

Selectmen also suggested the department include custodial services in its budget. According to Kealy, it would cost $442 a month to have the station cleaned three times a week. He assured selectmen that the building was in desperate need of the improved maintainence. "It's filthy," he said. "It has to be cleaned on a regular basis."

Kealy told selectmen that the building is presently being cleaned "whenever we can get the young man in." For the $1500 annual appropriation, he explained, that is not often.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle asked that the department hire someone from the town to do the job, rather than going to Servicemaster, Inc., the company from which Kealy got his price quotes. "I'd hate to see you go out of town and hire someone," he said.

Chariman Cliff Mitman suggested that the board set a figure for custodi al services and let Kealy decide who to hire. "I don't think the purpose today is to see how it's going to get done," he said. "It's to see that Joe gets it in his budget."

Selectmen voted to recommend an increase of $3,500 for custodial services, putting the total for that item at $5,000, and raising the budget total to $535,456.

In contrast, Kealy noted that the advisory board voted Thursday night to cut the police department's budget by $3,700 in fuel, phone, photo supplies, and motor vehicle repair and maintenance. He explained that had not been present when the cuts were made. "I didn't know they'd taken up the police budget until I picked up the paper," he said.

Kealy felt that he should have been present to explain his budget to the advisory board. While he said that he can "live with" the cuts in phone and electricity, he does not feel that the department can get by for another year without increased funds for repair and maintenance of their motor vehicles. Especially since, he pointed out, the department has an additional car this year. "If this gets through," he said, "you may see me asking for a transfer."

Selectman DeBassio agreed, noting that the department was "level funded." "I see absolutely no justification," he said, "in those people making those cuts."

Fire Chief Martin Dooley reported that "all of the fire departments in the area have a secretary except Hull." In Hull, he explained, a fireman is paid extra to do the clerical work during his time off.

In Cohasset, he continued, "some reports are done by my wife, the bulk of everything else I come to the selectmen's office with."

Selectmen agreed that it was unacceptable for Mrs. Dooley to be working for the town without pay. They added that fire department records should not leave the building.

DeBassio noted that clerical help would produce a more efficient department. "If we have any hope for getting a fire prevention program going, or keeping inspection records up-to-date," he said, "the least we can do is get a part-time person."

The board voted to recommend a budget increase of $6,244.68 for part-time clerical services, bring the total to $682,222.

Also at Monday's meeting, Wire Superintendent Steve Wigmore asked that his position be changed from an S-14 to an S-16 classification.

Under the S-14 classification said Wigmore, top salary is $23,650 year, or $11.83 an hour. In the S-16 classification first-step salary is $26,190; $12.50 an hour.

Asked why his job sould be reclassified, Wigmore stated, "Through the years I think the superintendent's job has been underpaid ...I thought I'd take a crack at

Committee members admonish 'false' budget cuts

Chairman Joseph Nedrow admonished Gjesteby for her actions last week, adding it was his intention that the committee act as a team in reviewing and presenting next year's budget for the schools.

In an effort to temper remarks from other members, Nedrow noted, "it's important to remember the reason we are all here - for the young people of Cohasset."

It was his recommendation that the committee review Gjesteby's proposals during this week's budget review session.

Richard Conley, who served as committee chairman during the budget hearings last year, labeled Gjesteby's budget-trimming efforts "election year rhetoric." After re-checking figures she presented to the committee last week, Conley said there was a total of $6456 reductions in the school arts program "from this patron of the arts."

Gjesteby explained that her proposed reductions in the field trips account and the arts supplies account would simply level fund those budgets to last year's appropriations.

Conley continued, "I don't want to embarass Mrs. Gjesteby, but she has false information. People would love to think that we have all this money to cut. But unless the public has this book (a budget account with explanations supporting each request) and the budget book, and they take the time to read it, they won't see that the money is just not there.

"She is implying we are not doing our job. But I'm tired of hearing through this community that Mrs. Gjesteby is the guardian of the money, and the rest of the committee is not doing its job. I'm tired of hearing that Mrs. Gjesteby is the only one who does any work around here. When information like this is passed out without the benefit of the committee, it is wrong and it is unethical. If this continues, we might as well disband as a committee," he added.

Only when the entire committee approves of a proposal, should it be publically dispersed as "our stand," Conley said, " otherwise, it makes the situation worse and makes us all wrong."

In rebuttal, Gjesteby insisted her proposed reductions were all items suggested by the superintendent during previous budget reviews. She also said it was the responsibility of each committee member to prepare their own list of budget cuts for public discussion. Gjesteby said her line item budget review was accomplished "for no reason other than to spark discussion. There is no political rhetoric involved. If I was doing things just to be elected, I would sit back and not say anything. That's the safe thing to do. But this budget is too important to me."

Committee member Jack Langmaid disagreed with the list submitted by Gjesteby, and added that "nickle and diming" certain accounts such as textbook supplies, is not productive to the budget process.

In addition, he requested the school administration prepare a detailed list of the budget items that have thus far been designated for possible elimination.

That list, which totals about $85,000, will be prepared for next Monday's session.

it and see if I could get this job up where it belonged."

He explained that as wire superintendent he is responsible for the town's fire alarms and traffic lights, as well as serving as wire inspector, and town electrician. "I've rewired every single street in town since 1978," he said, adding that the department does a lot of work for the schools.

"We look at what we're saving the town," said Wigmore. He told selectmen they'd have to pay an electrician $18 to $25 to do the same work.

Selectman Mitman told Wigmore that he did not think the job had changed enough since 1980 to justify the job reclassification. "We shouldn't reclassify jobs," he said, "just because they haven't been reclassification for a while...I don't think anybody's implying they were not appreciative of the job you do."

DeBassio added that with the recent changes in the classification system, Wigmore had room for growth under the S-14 category.

In a less time-consuming decision, the board unanimously voted to allocate a $50 budget to the town government structure committee.

S.S. Science Center offers island trip

Since the first trip in 1981, over 200 members and friends of the South Shore Natural Science Center, Norwell, have traveled to the Caribbean Island of St. John. Two trips have been planned for this year: March 16 to 23 (8 days) and March 16 to 30 (15 days).

Accommodations at the private campsite, Maho Bay, which has its own sandy beach and one of the island's best locations for snorkeling, borders 9400 acres of the U.S. National Park. Each cottage consists of three rooms on wooden platforms and houses two to four people. The temperatures for March range between 69 ad 84 degrees with an average of 76 degrees. Gentle trade winds provide pleasant days and comfortable evenings.

According to trip coordinator, Gwen Ferrini, the unspoiled natural beauty of the island with the lack of commercialism is appreciated by those who have visited St. John. Pretrip gatherings familiarize the travelers with the island and available activities. Joining in this year's adventure for the second year will be the Cape Cod Museum of Natural History, Brewster, and the Thornton W. Burgess Society's Green Briar Nature Center, East Sandwich. Remembering Gilbert Tower's 'sense of history' document it for history," he adds.

This relatively small piece of wood contains several significant signatures, an important part of Cohasset's history.

Names such as William Tilden, April 1, 1898, are eternally engraved upon the plank. Weeks figures that many of these now-deceased men were boyhood chums of the precocious Tower. Perhaps the Meeting House bellfry became "a sort of boys' club before there was such a thing," he adds.

An August 6, 1898 statement reads "Spain declared peace with the U.S." No signature reveals the historian.

S.N. Ripley signed the plank on February 22, 1899 along with several other contemporaries, perhaps all participants in this boys' club.

Weeks explains why, in 1965, the four-man church committee was inside the bellfry.

The clock inside the Meeting House steeple was donated in 1866 to the town,but housed atop the church property. After 100 years of continuous service, the clockworks were no longer operating efficiently. It was time for the maintenance committee to check the damage.

An unnamed resident came before selectmen and offered to take the timepiece off their hands in return for a more modern edifice which would only cost the town $875. Weeks remembers the "rumpus" this spurred among church members, himself included.

"He was going to tear the old clock out and replace it with a modernized version. The maintenance committee was horrified and we went over to selectmen and told them to put a stop to that idea," he recalls without hesitation. "The clockworks in the original clock were probably worth three or four thousand dollars. It wasn't worth the trade."

According to Weeks, "selectmen ran for cover on this issue so the maintenance committee decided to do something about the clock. We did considerable overhauling and rebuilding of the clockworks and it has been running moderately well since."

Weeks figures the 120 year-old timepiece is probably worth $5000 now.

When the maintenance committee made the discovery in the bellfry, the only thing they did was to take it from the wall. "We all thought we had better preserve Gilbert's signature. He was such a prominent citizen of the town. We knew he'd be a part of Cohasset's history," he says.

The pair became good friends after Weeks moved to Cohasset in 1961. Through all their conversations and arguments, they never once mentioned the discovery in thebellfry.It was an unshared secret between friends.

Gilbert, who would have been 100 years February 15, left an indelible mark upon this town and his friends, Weeks explains. The Sandy Beach Lane resident still keeps a beautifully-detailed map framed upon his livingroom wall, outlining in the finest handwriting the streets and house numbers of Cohasset. Gilbert was a noted map maker. His map was created in 1955 when the population of the town was half of today's totals.

"We had a lot of good conversations and we had many good-natured disagreements," Weeks says. "He was always for expanding, in favor of growth. He wanted to give everyone the chance to afford life in Cohasset. He did not want property expense to prevent people from living here. I disagreed. If the town was to continue to grow, it would cease to be what it originally was - what attracted people here in the first place.

"I used to tell him people cause pollution and pollution destroys the quality of life. He thought everyone should have the opportunity to live here. We'd argue for hours."

As many residents will remember, Gilbert Tower was drawn to things of importance, to conversations of intelligence. That is why it is fitting that as a young boy, he would foretell a moment of international history and seize it for his hometown.

Faculty concert at conservatory

Friday, Jan. 25, the Friends of the South Shore Conservatory of Music will present another of their popular series "Four Fridays at Eight". This music series features members of the faculty and guests in various chamber music and solo performances.

They donate their talents for these programs for the enjoyment of the community; the concerts are free of charge. All the members of the faculty are professional musicians in the Boston area.

The program for the 25th will be a varied one, and will include: a Brahms string Trio with James Chubet (piano), Michele Parker (viola) and guest Anne-Marie Chubet (violin); Ravel's Mother Goose Suite played by pianists James Chubet and Susanne Dewart; four songs by John Dowland will be performed by soprano Sarah Smith, accompanied by William Buonocore on the guitar and they will also do the Bachianas Brasileiras #5 by Villa-Lobos; a change of pace will be improvisations on some familiar jazz standards by guitarist Paul Shumsky and pianist Elizabeth Reed will play Mozart's Sonata in F.

A special feature of the program will be the premier of two songs written by Dorothy Siegert of the piano faculty. The songs are set to two poems by the English poet, Laurie Lee. Patricia Welch will sing these pieces with Dorothy Siegert accompanying her on the piano.

Following the program, members of the Friends will serve refreshments and the musicians and guests will have a chance to socialize. The conservatory is located off 19 Fort Hill Street in Hingham.

Selectmen support budget increases

At a meeting last Wednesday, Jan. 16, selectmen recommended that the police and fire departments include funds for clerical services in their 1986-87 budgets.

According to Police Chief Joseph Kealy, although the department has not had a secretary for several years there is more than enough work to warrant hiring a person full time. "I can't believe," he said, "that a department with 18 members has not got one secretary attached to it."

Cohasset is the only town in its area, noted Kealy, that does not provide clerical help for its police department. "I don't know of any other police department that doesn't have at least one secretary," he said.

Kealy also pointed out that the lack of clerical help leaves officers to do the work. "They are spending time in the station," he said, "when they should be out on the streets.

The selectmen asked Kealy to look into the costs of clerical services, and return with those figures on Monday.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur expressed an additional concern over the maintenance of the police department building.

Kealy noted that with one $1500 allocated for custodial services, the department could not expect to have the building cleaned on a regular basis. "I'd like to hire a full-time person," said Kealy.

Selectman John DeBassio, who preceded Kealy as chief of police, agreed, arguing that the building needed "regular preventative maintainance."

According to Kealy the Scituate Police Department paid $350 a month for custodial services in 1983. He agreed to provide the selectmen with updated cost estimates on Monday.

Significant changes in the 1986-87 police department's budget include: an increase of $3,700 in the personal services account for step-rate raises, an increase of $1,000 for repair and maintenance of motor vehicles, and an increase of $400 for medical expenses.

Selectmen later suggested that the fire department also allocate funds for secretarial services in their budget.

According to Fire Chief Martin Dooley, most of the department's clerical work is being done by his wife and the board of selectmen's secretarial staff. Mrs. Dooley, who was present at the meeting, did not feel that she could continue to do the work. "I can't keep up with it," she said. "I just can't do it."

Selectman Cliff Mitman assured Mrs. Dooley that she should "not have to do the town's work," and suggested that the department seek part-time help. "A part-time person would be a giant step for us," said Dooley.

The chief agreed to find out what other departments in the area do for clerical help and would return with the information.

Significant changes in the fire department budget include: a $28,000 cut in the overtime account, a $500 cut in inservice training, a $5000 increase in call firemen, and capital outlays of $10,501 for communication systems, $650 for a new respirator, and between $125,000 and $149,000 for a new engine. The respirator, noted Dooley, "will be able to handle small children." The new engine will replace an engine which, said Dooley, "is in the shop more than out lately."

Selectmen also reviewed the building inspector and dog officer's budgets.

Building Inspector Edward Poskus requested a $400 increase in personal services to hire part-time help during his secretary's two-week vacation. "I think we should cover it by beefing up the overtime that we manage out of our own office," said Selectman DeBassio. Selectmen agreed to increase their own overtime budget and allow the executive secretary to decide when vacations could not be covered by the remaining staff.

Other significant changes in Poskus's budget included: a $500 cut in travel allowances, a $160 over-run in office supplies, and a request of $7 a month for meeting fees.

Selectmen voted to approve Poskus's budget of $43,045; $36,640 in personal services, and $6,405 in general expenses.

Significant changes in Dog Officer Richard Yokum's budget included cuts of $300 in gasoline and $100 in travel. Yokum asked that these funds be used instead to purchase a radio. He also requested a $150 increase in unclassified funds, and a $500 salary increase. According to Yokum, he puts in an average of 15 hours a week. Selectmen expressed support of a $500 raise, and voted to approve Yokum's budget of $6,300; $3,500 in personal services, and $2,800 in general expenses.

Members of the drainage committee also expressed their concerns to the board of selectmen last week. At the top of their list was the drainage bylaw which they are presently drafting.

Committee member Tom Cook asked if the bylaw could "become part of the zoning bylaw." He noted that the planning board had expressed concern over the same issue.

Selectman Cliff Mitman agreed that this was the primary concern. "Before we go any further with the bylaw," he said, "we need to resolve the basic legal problem; how are we going to fit it into the town?"

Walter Ross added that the group was not being acknowledged or fully utilized. "We're probably one of the most important issues involved in zoning matters," said Ross, "but we're at the bottom of the list."

"We understand your frustration," responded Selectman McArthur, "please be patient."

Fires in landfill

Over the past weekend the Cedar St. Landfill experienced three fires as a result of hot ashes being dumped either into the metal trash bins or the working area of the landfill. Fortunately, these fires were controlled before any serious damage occurred.

Fires in a landfill can be very serious, costly and difficult to extinguish. Ashes which appear to be cool frequently contain enough residual heat in the center of a pile to start a fire.

There is a special area for dumping ashes. If you don't know where this area is, please check with the landfill supervisor and he can show you where ashes are to be placed.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

CAUSES OF SUBLUXATION

Spinal misalignments, which impinge the nerves or produce irritation, are called subluxations. Minor subluxations can occur from the ordinary, everyday stresses and strains or normal living, even from such simple acts as twisting or turning. If left unattended, they can become chronic, resulting in severe and painful conditions. A fall or injury can often cause major subluxations. They can be produced by any type of shock that overloads the nervous system's protective mechanisms. Even the unavoidable and ever-present downward pull of gravity on the upright body often overcomes body balance and produces poor posture. Misalignment of the spinal vertebrae may result. Abnormal function of cells, tissues and organs may also be caused by the enusing nerve irritations.

Normal routines free of excesses and the impact of accidents or physically active hobbies or occupations can all serve to cause spinal misalignments and subsequent problems and discomfort. Address such problems early as well as establish a routine of periodic chiropractic attention. For the care you desire and deserve, call the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12. Tel. 383-1211, 1214. We offer daily office hours by appointment.

Lower quorum proposed

The town moderator will meet with selectmen, the advisory committee and members of the town government structure committee to discuss their recommendation to cut Town Meeting quorum in half.

The Committee to Survey Structure and Functions of Town Government unanimously recommended last week that an article be included in the April Town Meeting warrant, requesting that the quorum be reduced from 200 to 100. The committee, headed by John McNabb Jr., studied the issue for the past three months. Input was received from last year's Cohasset League of Women Voters study along with a survey conducted earlier this year by former Executive Secretary Mark Lanza.

Based on the combined studies, the government structure committee unanimously voted that Town Meeting business could be resolved more efficiently with a lower quorum requirement. Gathering a quorum at Town Meetings has been a problem plaguing this community since 1979, according to chairman McNabb.

The chairman looked back into Town Meeting records for the past 15 years which revealed that on six different occassions, twice last year, the town failed to produce a quorum and Town Meeting was cancelled.

"Since 1980, it has been usual to wait a half-hour to an hour for quorum. It is a problem that is becoming a trend here and in many other communities," he added.

Last year, Executive Secretary Lanza surveyed 72 similarly-sized communities. Sixty one towns responded to the questionaire. Sixteen of those communities with a population between five and ten thousand, had no quorum requirement.

Four percent of the towns had a quorum of 200 residents. The average quorum of those towns surveyed was two percent of the population. Cohasset's current quorum is 4.1 percent of its total registered voters. Nine of the surveyed communities had higher quorum percentages. Calculating the total figures, McNabb said the quorum average for the surveyed towns totaled 88.

"We thought 100 was comparable to all these towns," McNabb said. Quorum failure is a trend everywhere. It's difficult to hold town meetings and get the routine business of the town done. The special articles will always attract some interest, but we are still legally bound to complete the more routine business articles."

The government structure committee recommended the 100 quorum requirement for the following reasons: the 200 quorum, adopted in 1933, presents difficulties in getting enough registered voters together to transact business; it is most difficult to attract 200 voters for routine, non-controversial measures; the 200 quorum is twice as high as other towns of similar size. Cohasset's 200 quorum is twice the average of two percent in the 61 towns surveyed last year; lowering the quorum may make it easier to begin town meeting on time and proceed expeditiously.

"The problem of apathy and lessened interest in town affairs has occurred in many towns across the state, most who have responded by lowering or eliminating their quorum requirement," McNabb stated.

According to McNabb, the committee did discuss other alternatives such as no quorum requirement, and representative town meeting. These suggestions were discarded in favor of the 100 quorum regulation, a decision voted unanimously by the committee.

Golden steers reform caucus

Senator William B. Golden, a founding member of the Senate Rules Reform Caucus, recently announced the membership of the caucus is now bipartisan and includes 18 out of 40 state senators.

At the first caucus meeting held Jan. 10, the caucus, which consists of 7 Republicans and 11 Democrats, elected bi-partisan officers.

The first action of the caucus was an unanimous vote to begin the debate on Rules Reform for the Senate on or before Feb. 6.

The caucus also voted unanimously to support the package of Rules Reforms included in the "McGovern Report" and to request that all recommendations of the Rules Committee to amend the report be available in writing at least 48 hours prior to the rules debate.

Golden said, "This bipartisan effort to work toward substantive rules reforms is important. As a funding member of the caucus, I am particularly encouraged by both the growth in membership and its bipartisan composition." "The caucus was formed to explore responsible rules reforms through the combined talents and energies of its participating members. Toward this end, I have made the following proposals to the caucus for its consideration and action."

They are:

Annual audit by the Inspector General of all legislative accounts.

Mandatory discharge from the Committee of a pending bill after approval of 25 percent of the committee membership.

Discharge of bills from the committees on Rules, Ways and Means and on bills in the third reading upon petition of 40 percent of the members of the Senate.

Ratification of all committee assignments by rank and file members in party caucuses.

Committee chairmen would be elected by a vote of committee members, and not by nomination or appointment of the Senate President.

A specific limit on night sessions.

Golden has been charged with responsibility to steer one of two caucus task forces formed at the most recent meeting held Jan. 17. The Committee will next meet Jan. 23 and Jan. 24 to continue its rules reform efforts and initiatives.

☐ Scott Fone was home last weekend, and they celebrated in grand style. Sis Joanna even made a surprise appearance, just to make it a complete success. Scott is a soon-to-be bridegroom and transferee (he is St. Louis bound due to a company transfer). Good luck and best wishes.

☐ Hear that Barbara Jones is in the hospital and we all want to wish her well. Here's hoping they are able to mend you up like brand new and ship you home real soon.

☐ Jennifer A. Alemain of 101 Beach St., Cohasset is enrolled in the Interior Design Program at Chamberlayne Junior College in Boston for the spring semester which began this month.

The college, which is located in Boston's Back Bay, serves students with both career and more traditional academic interests.

☐ Linda Henderson wanted everyone to know that her efforts to sell tickets to help the Foster children paid off handsomely. Although she did not sell a winning ticket personally, Linda reports that Cohasset did its share of buying tickets and supporting this most worthy cause. I'm sure there will be more efforts made on behalf of the Foster Children, and that she will keep us informed.

Recreation schedule

ELM'S MEADOW SKATING

Many thanks should go to Peter G. Laugelle, Tree and Park Dept. Superintendent, and Harold W. Litchfield, Highway Surveyor, and their crews, for clearing of the Elm's Meadow Skating Area.

Unlike most seasons, this year Elm's Meadow did not dry out sufficiently for cutting. While a number of attempts of various types were made to clear the skating area since last July, all were thwarted by wet, muddy conditions.

To the rescue, however, were the Tree and Park and Highway Departments who, once the water had frozen, went in and cleared the area essentially by hand. Certainly an act beyond the call of duty.

Plans now are to re-flood the area at a higher level of water and hope for continued cold weather. For the flooding, we thank Ben Curley, Superintendent of the Water Department, and crew.

THE UPPER HAND THEATRE

Friday evening, 7:30 p.m., January 25, at the Town Hall auditorium, the Cohasset Recreation Department will present "Upper Hand Theatre" presentation of the "Magic Hat." There will also be cartoons and refreshments on sale. Cost of admission is $1.50 per person.

Puppeteer William Northey, who founded the Upper Hand Puppet Theatre in 1976, will also give a brief explanation of puppet-making and performing after the show. The puppet show is ideal family entertainment and all are welcome.

SKATING

With cold weather, hence, ice skating season approaching, the following should be used as a guideline for safe ice. Common sense is the most important denominator, however.

Ice safe for	0-30°	30-40°	40-50°
Single skaters	1¾ inches	2¾ inches	6 inches
Couples	2¾ inches	3¾ inches	8 inches
Crowds	3¾ inches	4¾ inches	12 inches

These figures are for clear, fresh water ice only; for snow ice, add two inches; for water-logged ice, add three inches; if skates cut in — Go Home! Salt water in mild climates is always treacherous — keep away from it. Also thickness in 40-50 degree column are safe depths for short periods of time only, testing your weight as you go.

The deepest portion of Elm's Meadow is toward the Spring Street Dam (about 12 inches to 18 inches). The shallowest is towards the back of the area, two inches or so.

Do not throw debris on the ice to check for safety. This only clutters up the ice, making skating dangerous, and does not give you an accurate indication of ice strength.

Lights will be provided for night skating at Elm's Meadow. Lights are on a timer and are scheduled to go off at about 9:30 p.m. However, if you are the last one skating and it's before 9:30 p.m., please throw the manual intercede switch located on the light pole, Cushing Street, by the end towards Spring Street.

By doing this the lights will not be operating with no one skating. The manual switch is located on the outside of the gray light box. Do not, under any circumstances, open or try to open the box itself. It carries high voltage.

Hockey should be played on the Spring Street side of the skating area. The open side along Cushing to the rail bed is for free skaters. Keep away from the Spring Street dam as the ice has a tendency not to freeze too well in that area. Should you fall in or break through the ice while skating on Elm's Meadow, do not panic. The deepest point of water is probably no deeper than 18 inches to two feet. Remember that it is possible to drown in the bath tub if you panic.

CHANGING MONEY IN RIO
Traveling to Rio De Janeiro? Not only does it offer the chance to frolic in an international, tropical paradise, but it gives one the opportunity to double his cash as well. This can happen if cash is changed on the black or "parallel" market. The black market in Brazil is winked at by enforcement agencies, possibly because it would cost too much to shut it down. Wealthy Brazilians want dollars to hedge their investments. In the hyper-inflationary Brazilian economy (200 percent in 1983), the dollar is going nowhere but up. Further fueling the upward swing of the dollar are rumors of another "maxi-devaluation" of somewhere near 30 percent.

School budget

This week we present our fifth school budget story. For the past few weeks, the school committee has met weekly to look over accounts and line items, attempting to pare down a budget that was thousands of dollars over the advisory committee's recommended total of $4,191,335.

This is no easy task. Some may say it's an impossibility without hurting the education of our children in Cohasset. During the past weeks, relatively small, inconsequential cuts have been made in various accounts. But according to Supt. Eugene Crowell, thus far the reductions have been "palatable" to school administrators.

There's been some talk lately about reducing the staff at the junior/senior high where student enrollment remains on a steady decline. That's a touchy subject, to be approached in closed-door sessions following negotiations with the teachers' union.

The school budget, according to town mandate, encompasses 55 percent of the town's annual operating budget. That's a lot of money.

It seems incredible to us that throughout these budget sessions, there has been virtually no attendance by parents or interested residents. One or two may trickle in to listen to items of particular interest. But this week attendance was sparse - just the school principals and a perspective school committee candidate.

In other towns, parents, taxpayers and parent-teacher organization members crowd into each budget meeting. Copies of the particular budget to be discussed are available for audience members to peruse. School committee members scrutinize every account, line by line. Then audience members are given an opportunity to ask questions of administrators and department chairmen.

Therein lies a problem. This year, the budget review process has been altered in Cohasset. Department requests are not individually investigated. It has been a total package deal from the start. If committee members have particular questions, they will be answered. But there is no guarantee that a department spokesman will be there. And he or she is the one with the firsthand knowledge of the department, its needs, expenditures and requests, and the explanations behind those requests.

We think the review of such a large budget package should be made more accessible and more understandable to the general public. Why not have department chairmen in attendance at specified meeting dates? Questions relating to that singular, particular budget could be raised at that time.

It's such a large amount of money, with such important consequences. We think the public should be more interested in the state of their schools. The school committee should be more responsive to the concerns of the community.

Limping his way into office

By Claire McDonough

The Dragon held up a blue and white jogging suit.

"What do you think?" he asked.

"That depends," I told him. "Are you planning to wear it or use it for a wall hanging?"

He looked hurt. "You didn't say that when Mike Dukakis wore one of these. And they're all the rage now. All the gang at Angelo's is getting them."

"Everyone at Angelo's lunch counter is taking up jogging?"

He shook his head. "I didn't say that. I said everyone is getting jogging suits. Then we'll pretend to sprain our ankles, limp up to the admission desk at South Shore Hospital, and hope the television cameras are on and running."

"Doesn't that strike you as just a tad dishonest?" I inquired. "After all, Governor Dukakis really does jog."

"Not totally dishonest," he replied. "And anyway, you can't tell me he was jogging by the set of 'St. Elsewhere's.' He was putting on an act, just like the rest of us. And he doesn't even have to resort to subterfuge to get on television. When he gave the State of the State Address, we missed two minutes of the Celtics game because all the television stations were covering him."

I sighed. "O.K. So then what happens after you limp up to the emergency desk?"

He considered for a minute. "Well, the guy at the desk probably won't believe me when I tell him I'm the Dragon," he replied modestly. "He probably won't believe that anyone so important would just show up at a local hospital without any fanfare."

"As a matter of fact," he continued, "he'll probably tell someone to tape my ankle till my eyes bulge."

"That does sound likely," I admitted. "He may even tell someone to tape your mouth, too.

"What happens next? After you've announced to someone at a hospital admitting desk that you're the Dragon with a sprained ankle?"

"You don't have any vision at all," he told me. "As I turn from the desk to go to the examining room, the camera will doubtless zero in for a close-up. I plan to register agony, moderated by bravery. I will wince, then immediately smile courageously at the beautiful young nurse who will rush to assist me.

"Then, if some insensitive clod of a doctor does tape my ankle tightly, I will grip the side of the examining table, bite my lower lip, and keep my upper lip stiff at all times."

"Impressive," I said. "Then do you limp off into the sunset with your faithful poodle, Serenity?"

"Not immediately. You may observe," he added, "that these jogging clothes are custom-made. Much of your ordinary jogging attire doesn't even have pockets.

"These pants, however, are fitted with a weather-proof pocket, just the right size for carrying my cards."

He extracted a card from the pocket, and handed it to me with a flourish.

It carried the modest message, in simple Gothic lettering, "The Dragon Is Available. Call 545-4413."

"I plan to distribute these among the members of the audience that will undoubtedly have gathered," he explained.

"I'm beginning to get it," I told him. "You're hoping there will be talent scouts in the emergency room at South Shore Hospital, and they'll discover you, and offer you a lucrative contract in show biz, right?"

"Wrong," he replied.

"I'm not looking for talent scouts; I'm looking for king-makers. After all, a background as an actor seems to be an asset to a political career these days, and the way I see it, the 1988 presidential race is wide open."

I felt his forehead for fever. "Maybe you'd better lie down," I advised, "till the feeling passes."

"You think I'm out of my mind to believe I could be elected?" he asked.

"Not necessarily," I told him. "But I certainly think you're out of your mind to want to try."

Thanks for holiday decorations

Dear Bob:

On behalf of the Fire and Police Departments, I wish to thank you for your gift of the Christmas wreaths for the entrance doors of the station. It was very thoughtful of you and certainly in keeping with the spirit of Christmas.

The Town of Cohasset is very fortunate to have business people like yourself who are so cooperative. On behalf of the men of the Fire and Police Departments, I would like to thank you for your thoughtful donation.

May the New Year, 1985, bring all the best to you and your family.

Freezing weather can be fatal to pets

What should I do if I observe a dog tied out in the bitter cold for hours on end?

First of all, I want you to take a good look at the dog pictured in this article.

Then I want you to get mad—mad as heck, if you want—mad enough so that you'll be more aware of any dog you might see tied outdoors in freezing cold weather such as we're experiencing right now. If you know of any existing similar situation, get to the nearest phone and call your local animal control officer (ACO) right away.

Can you believe that the dog in the picture was tied outdoors, with absolutely no shelter from the wind, and froze to death?

It happened right here on the South Shore!

But things like this aren't supposed to happen here—we know better than to do something stupid like tying a dog out in the bitter cold...or do we?

It's sad and it's tragic, but it does happen in our sophisticated suburban area.

The General Laws of Massachusetts, cruelty section, state that:

"Whoever, having the charge or custody of an animal, either as owner or otherwise, inflicts unnecessary cruelty upon it, or unnecessarily fails to provide it with proper food, drink, shelter or protection from the weather or knowingly and willfully authorizes or permits it to be subjected to unnecessary torture, suffering or cruelty of any kind shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than one year or both."

In my opinion, the penalty is not enough, but the law's the law until we can change it through legislation.

Dog owners, take note! During cold weather such as we're having right now, especially with severe wind chill factors,your dog can't be left out for hours at a time without adequate shelter. It must be brought indoors—to the garage, the basement, the porch—anywhere that is out of the wind.

If your dog (or cat) has been severely exposed to the cold, follow these simple steps in order to save the animal's life:

1. Restore body heat by rapidly immersing the animal in a tub of warm water (about 102 degrees).

2. After rewarming, feed the animal with a solution of warm milk or water containing a half teaspoon of salt and a half teaspoon of baking soda per quart of liquid.

3. Dry the animal gently with towels and a warm blow dryer and wrap it in blankets. Do not rub vigorously, as this may damage the skin excessively.

ANIMAL CONTROL

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

by Paul Murphy A.C.O. Hingham

4. Seek veterinary assistance promptly. Call the Animal Control Officer for transportation of the animal to the clinic. While the animal is being transported, call the clinic and have them stand by to help receive the animal.

Please, in your travels around town, or even in your own neighborhood, take the time to look for animals you think might be in trouble. All it takes is a phone call to your local ACO.

Let's prevent all the senseless animal deaths we can.

Have a question on pet care or animal control? Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy is happy to answer all questions. Just mail your query to the Hingham Mariner*, P.O. Box 290, Hingham 02043 for a reply.—Ed.*

WINTER STORM

I went out when the storm was gone
And heard the crunch of frozen snow
With every step
And listened to the wind,
That heartless wind of winter.

I walked along while a halyard clanked,
Marking my every step
With a clank and a clank and a clank, clank clank
While the cold wind cried out alone.

Sweeping the salt pier clear of snow,
Whipping the white-capped cove,
Straining the lines of the few boats left,
Working boats, lobstermen,
That know well the wind's long wail.

The yachts are gone.
The summer sailors dance to rock and roll
And hear no halyard clank,
Nor feel the biting wind,
But pause to watch the channel buoys:
Lovely winter scene.

Summer's breeze will come once more,
Bellying out the sails,
But will not etch the frozen prints
Of a dog that crossed this pier
When the snow was soft and new.

Senior Center project begins questionnaire

The Cohasset Social League and Council on Aging announce the formation of a Senior Center Project Advisory Committee. The Committee represents the Council, the League and the community-at-large, and will assist and advise the Project Developer Karin Bartow.

Representing the Council on Aging are Anthony Finegan and Dorothea Bjorkren. Finegan is a semi-retired assurrance consultant and is affiliated as a Field Quality Manager with Litton Data Systems Industries. He is in charge of maintenance of the Senior Shuttle Bus, serves as a volunteer driver, and assists with the Council's monthly newsletter, Vista.

Bjorkren is the Council's Secretary and is a Meals-on-Wheels driver for the Social Service League. She is a retired underwriter for the Commercial Union Insurance Company and a member of the Fanuiel Chapter of the Business and Professional Women's Club of Boston.

Serving as representatives of the Social Service League are Pam Henry and Ann Hublitz. Henry has been a League Board of Directors member for five years and served for three as Chairman of the Geriatric Counseling Committee. Formerly a social worker, she volunteers as a Senior Shuttle driver and is a member of the South Shore Elder Services.

Hublitz is Vice President of the Social Service League Board of Directors and has coordinated the TEC (Teens Exploring Careers), a summer intern program, for the past two years. She is a member of the Coastline Council for Children's Pregnancy Prevention Committee.

Hublitz is a presenter of Jr. League of Boston projects in area schools for drug abuse programs, Art Goes to School, Hospital Show and Tell and Kids on the Block. She has also volunteered for three years in the Mainstreaming Project in the Cohasset schools.

Community-at-Large members are Betty Enders, Malcolm Onwood and Gerard Keating.

Enders served for five years as Director of the Tuesday luncheons sponosored by the Council on Aging and served as Secretary of the Cohasset Historical Commission. She worked for 16 years in the Cohasset School System.

Onwood, formerly a member of the Council on Aging with responsibiltiy for the Senior bus maintenance, is a volunteer driver for the Shuttle bus and a member of the Old Goats.

Keating, the retired Postmaster of Cohasset, has served in many community capacities. He is the former President of the Rotary Club, Chairman of the Personnel Board, Chairman of the School Committee, and former Director of the Civil Defense and Veterans Services.

The Advisory Committee meets on a monthly basis with the Developer to monitor progress of the project. After six weeks of fact finding, Bartow reported to the Committee in December that while there are many community services, all of which are run in large part because of senior volunteers, they are underutilized. Some services, such as FISH, a voluntary emergency medical transportation program, are unknown to most residents.

The Developer suggested that a unifying facilitator and/or facility would probably strengthen the existing programs and provide a vehicle for growth of needed services, activities and support for senior citizens.

The Committee agreed that it would be beneficial to survey senior citizens to find out what their response to the concept of a senior center is. The questionnaire will also be designed to find out why more people aren't using existing services and programs.

The survey will be mailed to Cohasset residents age 60 and older within a few weeks.

Thanks for Hospice donations

Letters

To the Editor:

Would you please permit us to thank your readers for their generous support of Hospice of the South Shore, Inc. during our winter fundraising drive. Although the campaign for this year has not been completed, we are very pleased to date with the individuals, businesses and organizations throughout the South Shore area who have helped us toward our goal.

We would like to assure those who give that Hospice is a non-profit organization and all the funds go directly to subsidize the program of home care Hospice provides for terminally ill patients. This year we expect to give over $100,000 in subsidized care.

The Hospice program includes the coordinated services of professional nurses, rehabilitation therapists, a medical social worker, home health aides and trained volunteers. Much emphasis is placed on helping the whole family to care for their loved one and to cope with the distress of illness and bereavement.

Community support of Hospice makes it possible for those with life-threatening illnesses to receive compassionate care at home. Donations may be made to Hospice of the South Shore, 400 Franklin Street, Braintree 02184.

To all those who have given -- Thank you!

Books on women

"Women in Action" is a timely display of young people's books on women in the children's room of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. New titles have been purchased with a special grant from the South Shore Chapter of the National Organization for Women (N.O.W.).

The funds were awarded for the purchase of non-sexist materials for very young children, middle graders and young adults and includes history, fiction, biographies and folktales. Tatterhood and Other Tales, by Phelps, Quiet on Account of Dinosaur by Thayer, Mothers Can Do Anything by Lasker, Women Who Dared by McLenighan, An Eye on the World: Margaret Bourke-White, by Siegal, Lady for the Defense by Fox and Mary Jo's Grandmother by Udry are a few of these titles.

The display will be featured for the month of January.

Democratic caucus

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will be holding a caucus Saturday, Feb. 9, 1985 at 2 p.m. to elect delegates to the 1985 Massachusetts Democratic Convention.

The Convention, which will be held in Springfield on May 18, 1985, will adopt a Party Platform. Cohasset will be electing five delegates and two alternates equally divided between men and women, to send to the Convention.

The apportioned number of delegates has been allocated on the basis of a formula giving equal weight to the Democratic Party registration and the average vote for Democratic candidates in the last general elections for Governor and President for which figures were available at the time delegate tabulations were prepared. Chairman Donna J. McGee will call the caucus at Cohasset Town Hall. The caucus is open to all registered Democrats, persons ineligible to register and media representatives. The only persons eligible to participate in any portion of the caucus are those who are registered Democrats in the ward or town as of December 31, 1984. There will be no absentee or proxy voting.

Candidates for delegate and alternate must also be present and give his or her written consent to be nominated and that nomination must be seconded by two persons present at the local caucus.

All ballots will be written and secret. Those candidates receiving the greatest number of votes on the first ballot will be elected. Each candidate will be allowed to make a two-minute speech and to distribute on his/her behalf one sheet of paper listing qualifications and ideas.

Slate-making is allowed, but no special preference shall be given to slates. There is no quorum requirement for the caucus.

There will be no admission or expense charge at the caucus, although donations may be solicited.

Cooking class

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club held their first meeting of the New Year Jan. 21. Despite the coldest day of the year the meeting was very well attended and thoroughly enjoyed by everyone because of the guest speaker, hypnotist Michelle Dyan of Braintree Studios.

She kept all members fully attentive and relaxed with her expertise in "Stop Smoking Methods" and her weight loss technique.

The next guest speaker, Clinton McCoy, will demonstrate the art of Chinese stir fry cooking.

LWV education meeting

The preliminary findings of the Cohasset League of Women Voters education study group will be presented Jan. 31, 1985, 7:30 p.m. at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main Street, Cohasset.

The League of Women Voters of Massachusetts has always supported efforts to improve the quality of education in the Commonwealth. The League and the Dukakis Administration support educational reform, however, both feel the bill focuses on programmatic issues and does not address the problem of school finance. The Governor has proposed an amendment to the HB5704 called a 3 tier approach. This amendment is designed to lessen the disparities in per pupil spending between communities.

Mark January 31 on your calendar and be sure to attend this informative meeting to learn what this means to the Cohasset School System and the education of our children. For more information call Judy Volungis at 383-0752.

Marlette to hold meeting

George Lane Marlette III, candidate for the school committee, will hold his first campaign strategy meeting Tuesday, Feb. 5.

All persons who are interested in working for George, or simply learning his views on the important issues concerning our schools are invited to attend the meeting.

First Parish

Special Parish Meeting

In spite of the snow and cold weather, a quorum was easily achieved for the Special Parish Meeting held Jan. 8 in Trueblood Hall to act upon the Report of the Financial Planning Committee. The meeting endorsed the establishment of designated reserve funds for Meeting House Maintenance, Minister Emeritus, Music, Parsonage and Operating.

Further, it was voted to set a goal of $100,000 plus fund raising expenses for a capital fund drive to increase Meeting House Maintenance Reserve to a level adequate to finance current restorative work and assure a goal of maintenance of the building in the future.

The Meeting also established a goal of $65,000 for the 1985-86 Every Member and Friend Canvass as the amount needed to sustain the programs of the church without dependence on investment income.

A decision on whether or not to employ a fund-raising consultant to assist with attainment of these challenging goals was delegated to the Parish Committee pending further discussion with the Financial Planning Committee and investigation of the services such a consultant might offer and the costs involved.

Hypothermia During Winter Months

Elder Affairs Secretary Richard H. Rowland today advised Massachusetts elders to take precautions against the ill effects of Accidental Hypothermia. Accidental Hypothermia occurs when the body's normal internal temperature of 98.6° Fahrenheit falls below 95° F.

There are several specific signs to look for which indicate possible Hypothermia, including a change in appearance or behavior during cold weather; uncontrollable shivering; lack of shivering or stiff muscles; signs that an individual has been in an unusually cold room; slow and sometimes irregular heartbeat; slurred speech; shallow and very low breathing; weak pulse; lowered blood pressure; confusion, disorientation, or drowsiness, and the lack of coordination or sluggishness.

Inadequate nutrition has also been cited as a possible cause of Hypothermia in older adults. Food helps to fuel the production of body heat. Inadequate food intake decreases the body's supply of the vital resources it requires to meet its energy needs.

Drug abuse program

In response to the growing need for drug education, the Junior League of Boston has developed a new puppet program, which will be available for the Cohasset School System, "Turning On - Turning Off" a Kids on the Block Program on Drug Abuse.

"Turning On - Turning Off" was developed after a thorough review of the drug education curricula available, and through consultation with Second Genesis, an innovative and successful drug rehabilitation program operating throughout the United States.

The puppet program is designed to motivate young people to think about and discuss the issues of drug abuse, some of its causes and possible solutions. The Junior League has purchased the puppets and script from Kids on the Block, Inc. and provide education, training and ongoing supervision to community volunteers.

The first appearance of the puppets in Massachusetts has been enthusiastically supported in Hanover by the Hanover Woman's Club Juniors, the Task Force on Drug Abuse and the South Shore Area of the Junior League of Boston. The volunteers in the Hanover area are: Susan Carman, Paul Hayes, Anne Lorge, Faye Jones, Susan Kirley, Janice O'Hearn, Nancy O'Toole, and Ouida Walker.

South Shore oil spill resources reviewed by CZM

By Lisa J. Messersmith

Larry McCavitt, deputy director of the Massachusetts Coastal Zone Management office, Martin Pillsbury of the Massachusetts Area Planning Council, and Coast Guard Commander Douglas Brown met with South Shore coastal town officials and harbor masters last Wednesday to introduce a completed oil spill response plan.

The plan details what resources are available in the event of a spill and the individuals and agencies to contact.

The reaction time for the Coast Guard to reach and maintain an oil spill is quite long. After collecting and recording specific spill information, a representative said, the Coast Guard could take up to one and a half hours to reach the spill site.

Under the provisions of the response plan, the town coordinator will act as the "local eyes and ears" in case of an emergency, McCavitt said. Many of the coordinators of the response plan in the South Shore towns are also the harbor masters.

Harbor masters from Scituate, Cohasset, and Plymouth wanted to know more about the oil spills in their areas. Many times the harbor masters were not informed by the Coast Guard of oil spills in their harbors.

Robert Francis, Scituate harbor master and president of the Massachusetts Harbor Masters Association wants closer communication between the harbor masters and the Coast Guard. "Every harbor master wants to know what's going on in his harbor," he said, "we're merely trying to know all we can."

"We recognize the resource the harbor masters provide," Commander Brown replied. Under the response plan "the harbor masters will get more involved," he added. "There will be more situations in the future when we will notify the harbor master to find out what's going on."

In fact, the plan is devised to give local municipalities a major role in oil spill response. The compiled plan is designed for "local communities to respond expeditiously to protect their resources," McCavitt said.

Although much of the responsibility for oil spill response will lie with the towns, no state or federal funding is available to purchase the necessary clean-up equipment.

McCavitt would like to see a centralized location for the storage of equipment. He would also like to see the state Civil Defense Agency responsible for updating and coordinating the plan.

"The Civil Defense Agency has the power to respond to all kinds of emergencies," McCavitt said, "I would like to have oil spill response in their agenda" as a course to train local officials in this kind of emergency.

McCavitt is asking for a $20,000 grant from the state to "induce the Civil Defense Agency to agree to monitor the program." No state agency, he said, including the DEQE and the CZM, has any direct responsibility in the small harbors.

"It is possible that the DEQE would lend their assistance," McCavitt said, "but it has no legal responsibility to do so." Only if the incident were a major one would the Civil Defense Agency get involved, he said.

Funding for necessary equipment and education for the local officials could either come from the passage of a state bill or from an Outer Continental Shelf Revenue Sharing Bill.

The state bill calls for a fee placed on each barrel of oil passing through state waters in oil carrying vessels. The money would be placed into an Oil Spill Fund and distributed to coastal towns. Maine and New Hampshire have similar bills.

The OCS Revenue Sharing Bill calls for a percentage of all revenues gained through lease sales by the federal government. The money would be placed in a national pool and distributed to the states. If the bill passes, Massachusetts will receive between $6 and $10 million.

"The state would be required to pass 35 percent of the money to local communities," McCavitt said. Although the bill has been introduced again this year and passed by the House of Representatives twice, the Senate has yet to agree on the bill.

Until one of these bills passes, McCavitt urges towns to band together and purchase equipment such as oil spill booms which entrap the oil, pumps, trucks, and dispersents. This equipment could then be stored in a centralized location.

The detailed plan includes a set of maps which document areas most vulnerable to damage from oil spills. Shellfish beds and salt marshes are especially in danger because the shellfish become contaminated and the salt marshes soak up the oil which can remain for many years.

The response plan also indicates emergency access points for getting to the spills and points where heavy equipment such as cranes may be launched and utilized.

If an oil spill occurs one must notify the U.S. Coast Guard National Response Center in Washington, D.C., the U.S. Coast Guard Marine Safety Officer in Boston, and the Massachusetts Division of Water Pollution Control in Boston.

The Massachusetts Coastal Oil Spill Response Plan for the North and South Shores was prepared by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, Merrimack Valley Planning Commission, and the Old Colony Planning Council.

The $60,000 plan was funded by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the Coastal Zone Management Program, and the U.S. Department of Commerce under a grant from the Energy Impact Program.

Local baker begins workshop

By Judy Gilman

When Sine (say SEE-na) Pounder thinks of bread, she's not apt to open a plastic wrapper for a product that's been almost completely made by machine, from mixing the dough through forming the loaf and slicing it after baking.

The proprietor of The Bread Shop on Elm Street in Cohasset has become well-known in the area for her fine yeast breads and sweet rolls, all made from scratch. From scratch, these days, you see, is getting to be a rarer and rarer commodity, even among the bakers' community. And that's one reason Pounder will be offering her knowledge and accumulated tips on the fine art of bread-baking in a master baker's workshop that will start the end of this month.

"People have asked me to conduct a bread-baking class, and I did do one at the (Cohasset) Community Center," she said in a telephone interview Tuesday. "But I need to have my own space to work in and to teach in," which is why the workshop will be held at the bakery.

"There is a huge need for well-trained people," Pounder said, whose own training includes learning to bake in the Danish tradition (which is what her Christian name is) and a few days working with baker Daniel Handalian in his Brighton bakery.

"When the kids were young, I started, like a lot of other mothers stuck at home, making bread. And I was pretty good at it. When we moved to Cohasset, a lot of people said what was needed was a good bakery and why didn't I go into business. And then fate seemed to take a hand. The shop became available. The South Shore Chamber of Commerce ran a seminar on starting a small business and I thought, 'What the heck, I'll go.' The small business people were wonderful. The man who invented Downyflake rolls, who's retired and lives in Brookline, was absolutely wonderful with suggestions on what to do and not to do. He was an engineer who became a baker."

So Pounder went to work with Handalian for a few days. "I knew how to make bread. What I needed to learn was how the equipment worked and how to organize work space effectively. While I was there, there were two new bakers who came in and had to be trained from the beginning."

And that's Pounder's other reason for teaching the workshop—not only to introduce people to the joys of breadmaking, but also to train bakers for her shop. "We work in the traditional bakery way. We weigh ingredients, rather than measure and do almost everything by scoop and by hand. I would say this course is for gourmet cooks and caterers, professionals and those training to be bakers. You see, in this shop, we can't just order more when we run out. Every day (except Monday) we have to make everything we're going to sell that day."

The workshop will be offered in a six-week span, probably beginning Jan. 29 (depending on registration). It will be held one evening a week from 7 to 9 p.m., and students will be taking home something from each class. Pounder would like to have at least 12 in the class, and if more sign up, she will run another section.

For the general public, the tuition is $150. For senior citizens and high school students, there are reduced rates. For further information, call Pounder at the shop, 383-0305. The shop is open Tuesday through Saturday from 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., Sunday 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

School news

Thank you to 10th graders

(During the week prior to Christmas vacation, students in Grade 10 brought wrapped gifts to give to the children at the New England Home for Little Wanderers. The following thank-you was sent to Miss Robbins for the generous work of the sophomores. Special thanks to Joanie Chisholm, president of the Student Council, for delivering the gifts. J. Robbins.)

Dear Friend:

It is very heartwarming to know that there are still good neighbors today, reaching out to children in need.

Thank you for lending a helping hand again to a child going through hard times today, with your generous gift of new toys.

Sincerely yours,
Clifford W. Falby
Executive Director

Attendance policy correction

There were two mistakes in last week's issue pertaining to the attendance policy.

According to Supt. Eugene Crowell and school committee members Jack Langmaid and Diana Kornet, the following corrections should be noted.

A parent must notify the school attendance office the first morning of the student's absence that the child will not be attending school. The telephone call to the school is made the first day of the absence, not each morning of the student's absence, as was published in last week's notice.

On the morning of the student's return to school, parents must provide the attendance office with a written and signed note explaining the absence. Failure to do so will result in a zero for classes.

Last week it was published that failure to provide the note would result in a zero until a note is received. That is incorrect, Supt. Crowell explained, there is no "until a note is received" written into this year's policy.

There was some discussion by the school committee this week on the implementation of the revised policy. Chairman Joseph Nedrow said he had his first experience with the policy, and found it almost impossible to contact the school by phone, and nearly forgot about it after a few hours. Other committee members agreed, and said they have received complaints about the new policy.

Supt. Crowell said school administrators and teachers have also expressed displeasure with the policy. He urged the committee to review it before the start of the next school year.

Aerobics dance

The Leah's Aerobics Dance Company is beginning a session of aerobic-dance and exercise classes at the Montessori School, on Rte. 123 at the Norwell-Scituate line. The classes, which begin Monday, January 28, will be held from 7-8 p.m., Monday through Thursday, and Saturday mornings from 10-11. Certified instructors from Webb's Pro Fitness Club in Norwell will be teaching the eight week program.

Cost is $4 per single class, $50 for the whole session with two classes per week, and $75/session taking three classes per week. Registration will take place at each class.

For further information contact Melinda Mincolla in Cohasset at 383-9581 or Mia Doyle in Norwell at 659-4757.

Cohasset school sports news for the week

by Lisa Shumaker

Girls Basketball

Wednesday, the girls came back from a 17 point deficit in the third quarter to beat Rockland, 56 to 54. Sparked by Anne O'Leary's outstanding defensive performance, the Skippers outplayed Rockland the entire fourth quarter in what coach Bill Fallon calls, "A great comeback."

Offensively, Cohasset was led by high scorers Tracy Fitzpatrick, Carla Lucas, and Janet DiGorolamo. These three girls combined to score 35 of the Skipper's 56 points.

Friday, the girls blew past East Bridgewater 60 to 36. "Defensively, the whole team played very well," according to Fallon, who added, "the game was over at the half."

Carla Lucas, Cohasset's high scorer, had an exceptional game scoring 21 points, 19 of which came in the first half. Tracy Fitzpatrick followed Carla with 12 points and Janet DiGorolamo was close behind with 10. This victory put Cohasset in second place in their league only one game behind Norwell.

Tuesday, the Skippers will take on Hanover. Fallon predicts that this will be a close and difficult game for his team. Friday, however, the girls play Hull, a team which hasn't been much of a threat this year.

Wrestling

The boys had a tough week losing to all of their opponents. Cohasset was beaten by Scituate Wednesday. Unfortunately, sickness plagued the Skippers, and many of the boys were forced to move up in their weight classes which meant competing against bigger and stronger competition. However, despite the odds against them, both Brian Leary and Liam Stanford still managed to pull out victories in their matches.

Saturday, in a tri-match, both Cape Cod Tech. and Franklin were victorious over the Skippers. Cohasset suffered too many forfeits and were unable to overcome the point deficits.

Brian Leary, who has been having a fantastic season, beat a state qualifier and remains undefeated this season. Doug Bennett, Jim Staunton, and Peter Buckley all pinned their opponents, while Ricky Roarke and Glen Froio won as well. In a losing effort, Paul Froio impressed coach Torin Sweeney with his efforts.

Tuesday, the boys will travel to Lincoln-Sudbury High School and will take part in a very tough match. Friday, Cohasset is looking forward to Hingham and plan to beat this team which they tied last season.

Ice Hockey

Wednesday, the boys skated past Hull 6-3 in what coach Richard Izzo calls, "their best game all year long." The Skippers pulled themselves together and played as a unit which proved to be the key to their victory.

Alex Ghetto led Cohasset's offensive with 2 goals. Other Cohasset scorers were Troy Chatterton, Todd Fitzpatrick, Jeff Hartwell, and Dan Curran.

Peter Sandbloom had a strong game in net and was backed up by the outstanding defensive efforts of Philip Mahoney and Dan Curran.

The boys traveled to Sandwich Friday and lost 4 to 3. Cohasset played, "an excellent game" according to Izzo, "and skated with Sandwich the entire game which was not decided until the last few minutes."

Troy Chatterton, Jeff Hartwell, and Todd Fitzpatrick each picked up a goal and all played very well. Izzo also cited goalie Peter Sandbloom as having a good game.

Cohasset school sports news

The Skippers will take this week off from competition. However, the boys will be practicing hard all week and will be playing special attention to improving their defensive strategy and try to keep their goals against down to a minimum.

Gymnastics

The girls lost their only match this week to Norwell Monday by a score of 100.65 to 95.6. This score shows steady improvement over last week, and the enthusiasm of the Skippers grows every day. Jane deLima placed second overall picking up a first place on the bars and a second in every other event. Julia Sechen came in second behind Jane on the bars, and was third in vaulting. Cindy Dormer and Liz Buckley both showed remarkable improvement in their vaulting scores this meet.

Monday, the girls will take on Rockland in a meet which they hope to win and achieve their goal of scoring over 100 points. The Skippers meet Duxbury on Wednesday which coach Andrea Palardy predicts will be a very competitive contest.

Extra Note: Cohasset basketball fans are reminded that all those planning to attend the girls' game at 6 p.m. and the boys' game at 8 p.m. at Cohasset High School Friday can get in for half price, if they come wearing all blue and white. Both teams will be playing an old rival, Hull, so wear your school colors and show your spirit.

Boys Basketball

If the Skippers defeated Hanover Tuesday, Jan. 22, they would have set the school record for most consecutive wins (12) and automatically qualified for the state tournament.

As of Monday, the Skippers won 11 in a row and are 8-0 in the South Shore League, thanks to two wins over Rockland, 64-54 and 77-41 over East Bridgewater.

In what Coach Ed Minelli called the roughest win of the year, center Jim Creed scored, 23 points, had 19 rebounds and made 11 block shots. Guard Tony Bogarty scored 14 points, freshman Brian Edwards scored 13 points and David MacDonald chipped in with nine points.

Rockland tried a new defense on the Skippers as they tried to defend Bogarty [illegible] everal players. Although Cohasset led at the [illegible] 9-25, balanced scoring boosted the Skippers to a 1[illegible]2 run in the third quarter and never looked back.

It was no contest against East Bridgewater as Tony Bogarty scored his first triple-double of his career. Bogarty scored 14 points, hauled in 12 rebounds and handed out 13 assists.

Edwards, substituting for Creed at center(death in the family) scored 12 points and pulled down 11 rebounds. Bob Schultz added 17 points, Dave MacDonald chipped in with 13 points and eight rebounds and Phil Bernstein added eight points and nine rebounds.

Minelli said the team is now approaching the championship style play which characterized last year's team. He is extremely pleased with the play of David MacDonald and Phil Bernstein who have vastly improved since a year ago.

They are everywhere

Homeless on the South Shore

By Dave Warren

The state estimates there are 8,000 to 10,000 homeless persons in Massachusetts.

Up to a third of them live on Cape Cod. Many others have flocked to urban areas, living out of cars and sleeping under bridges, in back alleys and abandoned buildings.

And, in growing numbers, the homeless have come to the suburbs, looking for jobs and a place to live. Once a problem left to the major cities to deal with, homelessness has become a suburban issue of the '80's.

The homeless are everywhere. On the South Shore, their cries for help are being heard from Braintree to Marshfield and all towns in between. And with the combined efforts of state and local officials, as well as support from the private sector, the needs of the homeless are being addressed as a priority issue.

But just who are the homeless? Where do they come from? What is being done to help them? And what still needs to be done?

According to Mary Breslauer, spokesman for the state Executive Office of Human Affairs, people are homeless for many reasons, and they rarely fit the stereotypical images people have of them.

"People are homeless because of poverty, lack of affordable housing, mental illness, substance abuse, and in some cases, domestic violence," Breslauer said. "As a result, I think you really have to throw out the myth (that) the homeless are men, and that they may be alcoholic.

"Quite frankly, we're seeing a lot more women. Ninety-percent of the homeless are families. A lot of them are single women with two or three children."

Breslauer and others agree that the increased awareness of the extent of homelessness in the Commonwealth can be attributed largely to the efforts of Governor Michael Dukakis over the last two years.

Since 1983, Breslauer said, Dukakis has brought into existence 21 shelters with 2,100 beds for both families and individuals. Social welfare programs have also been a Dukakis priority.

In his State of the State address last week, the Governor reaffirmed his commitment to the homeless. He announced plans to rehabilitate the estimated 3,000 to 4,000 abandoned homes statewide into permenant housing for low and moderate-income persons.

'Quite frankly, we're seeing a lot more women . . . A lot of them are single women with two or three children.'

And in another move lauded by social service organizations, Dukakis is expected to ask for an additional $300 million for human service programs in the state budget, which the Legislature should receive this week. The figure represents an increase of nearly 10 percent, the largest increase in five years.

Breslauer said the Dukakis administration is employing a four-pronged approach to circumvent homelessness. This strategy consists of prevention, emergency services (temporary shelters), supportive services (skills training, etc.), and permanant housing ("the ultimate goal," Breslauer said).

Here on the South Shore, social service organizations and various community groups have banded together and followed the Dukakis initiative.

The Quincy Interfaith Sheltering Coalition is one of the larger organizations, combining the forces of 45 church groups and seven social service agencies. Since its inception last March, the coalition has started two shelters: a five-bed shelter at the Salvation Army in Quincy, and a 20-bed overnight facility at St. John's School, also in Quincy.

'Shelters are a band-aid solution. It's someplace to keep people from freezing . . . The real work is the case management and to try to get them permanently housed and settled.'

Nancy Powers, executive director of the coalition, said response to the shelters was greater than anticipated.

"Initially, we thought there might be 20 to 30 (homeless persons in the Quincy-Weymouth-Braintree area)," she said. "But in the first month that the St. John's shelter was open, we saw 69 different people . . . and we've seen many more new faces this month."

The coalition found permanent housing for 12 of those 69 persons. Five of nine persons who have stayed at the Salvation Army shelter have also claimed permanent residence (homeless persons are allowed to stay at the Salvation Army location for extended periods of time, provided they stay away from alcohol, and actively look for employment and permanent housing).

Many homeless who seek shelter in the South Shore come from out of state. They come to Massachusetts, which boasts one of the lowest unemployment rates among the industrial states and an ever-growing number of available jobs.

"(The statistics) are wonderful," Powers says. "But because of that, apartment prices have escalated, and rooming house prices have escalated."

When General Dynamics added 2,000 workers to its labor force last year, she added, the rooming houses filled overnight, and weekly rates rose from $35 to $65 a week. Workers who would be willing to pay these rates can't find a room to rent, demand is so high.

At the moment, there are 12 shipyard workers at the St. John's shelter--three from Louisiana, two from Connecticut, two from Maine, one from Ohio, and four from Pennsylvania, Powers said. The men, who came to the South Shore without enough funds to rent a room, will stay at the shelter until they receive their first paychecks in two or three weeks and can afford an apartment.

Another shelter that opened because of the General Dynamics situation was at the Faith Church of the Nazarine in Hingham. Reverend Michael Matthews converted the church's upstairs sanctuary area into a shelter after hearing of shipyard workers living at Wompatuck State Park.

When the park closed in mid-September, Matthews took 11 men in. A total of 20 persons, including four families were refuged at the shelter until it closed Dec. 11. Matthews was forced to close the shelter because of a lack of volunteers and his own pending departure in two weeks to start a new church in Cromwell, CT.

Matthews was hopeful a meeting scheduled for this Tuesday, Jan. 22, would produce someone to take over the shelter. Church leaders called for the meeting at the Hingham Congregational Church to get together with people from the community and address the homeless situation.

Matthews, once a homeless person himself, feels a better transportation system (that would allow more workers to live outside of urban areas) and an increase in low-income housing would help alleviate the homeless situation. Beyond that, however, he sees the need for greater acceptance of the homeless.

"One of the initial questions people have is 'Can I trust them?' . . The attitude has to change (so people realize) that people are basically good. We have to re-teach ourselves that we can trust people, that not everybody is out to steal from us," Matthews said.

Until the goal of low and moderately-priced housing is acheived, Matthews says there will be a dire need for additional shelters, as well as for volunteers to man them. "The money is helpful and needed," he said, "but time is also desperately needed."

Quincy Coalition director Powers agrees that low-cost housing, and not emergency shelters, has to be the long-term goal in fighting homelessness.

"Shelters are a band-aid solution," she said. "It's someplace to keep people from freezing . . . the real work is the case management and to try to get them permanently housed and settled.

Until more affordable housing becomes available, programs to motivate and re-train the homeless with viable job skills remains a top-priority at shelters around the South Shore.

At the South Shore Community Action Council in Plymouth, Homeless Coordinator Jean Bouchard says even if people develop a job skill and find work, apartment rentals--which average $400 to $600 throughout most of the South Shore--keeps permenant housing out of reach for many homeless.

"It's a catch-22 situation with many of these people," Bouchard said. "So, they may get depressed. We try to motivate them, get their spirits up . . . we also tell them they may have to go looking elsewhere for housing. It's a big problem."

The Action Council utilizes state funds to house persons in emergency situations at motels. In addition, they provide one month's fuel assistance to people who can't meet heating costs or are in need of clothes. They received over $41,000 in state funding this year, and have helped persons from all parts of Plymouth County, including all Mariner towns in the county.

All parties agree that permenant housing is the long-term solution to the problem. But with more cuts in federal social programs expected (Human Services' Breslauer said federal programs have been cut by 50 percent over the last three years), extremely low vacancy rates throughout the South Shore, and three to five-year waiting periods for subsidized housing programs, the need for additional temporary shelters will continue to grow, as will the need for community support.

Another adventurous ride on the MBTA

James O'Leary, Esquire
Executive Director, The M.B.T.A.
10 Park Plaza
Boston, Massachusetts

My dear Mr. O'Leary:

I am writing to report on my biennial ride on the M.B.T.A. in the hope that an unexpurgated description of the same will assist your management people on the parlous path to a functioning system.

The occasion of my biennial visit was the fact that my 1971 Buick Le Sabre 4,000 pound boat had contracted a hole in its muffler. I had patched the hole with auto body filler, a substance that hardens like rock and can, I've learned, be used for all kinds of holes, cracks and orifices. On the occasion of the ides of January, while waiting for my newly patched muffler to harden, I had business in our capital city, and it is thus that my biennial M.B.T.A. ride came to pass.

I embarked in Marshfield (a small town you may not be familiar with, but which I assure you faithfully pays its annual M.B.T.A. assessment) with an obscure South Shore publisher, the name of whom momentarily escapes me. The said publisher and I drove in his fire-engine-red convertible to Braintree whence to disembark in your parking facility there, and to embark on what in your professional jargon is referred to as the "Red Line."

Happily and without incident we found a parking spot for the convertible. As we walked from the parking lot to the station across what appeared to be two lanes of the Epping, New Hampshire Dragway, a car sped by at about 45 m.p.h., thus nearly assuring my entire readership of re-runs for eternity.

Having made it in one piece across the Dragway, we approached the station, an edifice that in the genre of hideous, non-New England architecture gets a C-. We paid our fare under the watchful eye of several middle-aged men in light blue uniforms who I later learned were "starters." They looked as though they hadn't started anything in quite a while.

As I attempted to pass through the turnstyle, it suddenly caught on something, and one of its pikes — how shall I say? — wrecked me in a place where a man who wishes to continue to be a credit to his gender ought not to be wrecked. How silly of me, I thought. The same exact thing happened to me in my 1981 M.B.T.A. ride. I should have worn protection!

When we got to the platform, a woman whose voice is not a credit to her gender, was loudly explaining over the public address sytem that it is a Commonwealthean crime to smoke on such platforms. Soon, a fire engine red train pulled into the station, at which time a seeming knowing patron said, "Oh, (deleted), a blue bird." No ornithologist he, for there was not so much as a pigeon in sight, only the fire engine red train pulling into the station.

The doors opened and we entered a car. The doors closed and the train heaved. Right away I knewwe were in trouble, for from my alcoholic days I know a dry heave when I see one. The train lurched forward about six inches and stopped. The doors opened and someone in the cold air repeated, "(deleted) blue birds." The doors closed again and there was another dry heave that brought us another six inches closer to Boston. Then the whirring of the train's motor stopped altogether.

At length a "starter" appeared and instructed us to all disembark. "There's a silver bird coming into the station," he said. "Good Heavens," I thought, "the next time I'll bring a spyglass." Alas, this fellow was no ornithologist either, for no bird appeared, only a stainless steel two-car train.

This train had no heat on this ides of January, but otherwise it fared better than its predecessor had — it made its way more than 500 yards down the track before stopping for a dry heave and a three-minute rest. But it recovered its disposition nicely and we went on our way again. Only one other time, when the train was half in, half out of Wollaston Station, did it stop for another quick dry heave. Otherwise we went right along toward our disembarkation point: Washington St. in downtown Boston.

At Washington St. the obscure publisher and I were to part company. After showing him down to lower Washington St. where he wished to examine the architecture, I decided to take in a movie.

The movie over, I walked back up to Washington Station, paid another fare, and went down to the Red Line platform. It appeared that the same women whose voice is not a credit to her gender was nowon duty at Washington St., for her voice could be heard once again loudly reminding folks that it is a Commonwealthean crime to smoke on subway platforms. On this occasion she was so raw and cacophonous that, although I do not normally take tobacco, I felt a strong urge to light up.

Presently a train marked "Braintree/Davis" came along. It filled up with young and old, and off we went to the next stop, Park St. There the cigarette lady was at it again, but another lady kept interrupting her, announcing, "All stops to Davis." But when the train had filled to capacity, a third lady came over the microphone: "This train will express to Harvard," she said about fifteen times.

A bunch of sullen folk got off and then we were off again. At each of the next three stations the train would slow down, the passengers on the platform would step forward, then the train would honk and speed up, leaving the waiting passengers drop-jawed. One man, who sadly only had one finger in the middle of his hand, waved to us as we passed through Kendall Sq. Station.

I got off the Davis train at Harvard, as I had been invited to sup with a credit to her gender who lives out on one of the trackless trolley lines from Harvard Sq. As I got off a "starter" came along with a bullhorn and said, "This train is going out of service, all Davis passengers off, there's another train right behind."

That didn't bother me, I was hurrying toward the trackless trolley platform. Then all at once I noticed I was in a brand new station. (for the hideous, non-New England genre of architecture it rates a B+.) I spotted a collector's booth at which the following conversation took place:

Your reporter: "Sir, where do I find the trackless trolleys?"

Collector: "The what?"

"The trackless trolleys."

"I don't think they run anymore."

"Sure they do, I saw one from my car just the other day."

"Try Brattle Station."

"I thought they closed that station."

"I said try Brattle Station."

"Is that where they run from?"

"They used to."

"Who will tell me where to find the trackless trolleys?"

"The starter would know, but he's not here."

"Well, will he be back?"

At this point the collector closed his window, stared at his newspaper, and refused to look up or speak despite my tapping on his window and saying, "Sir! Sir!"

"Thanks for your help," I finally spat. "Hope you all lose your jobs."

I spied several brand new phone booths and on my second try got one that didn't eat my dime. "Diane," I said, "this is Dave. I'm lost in Harvard Square, can you pick me up! I'll be in front of the Mug 'n' Muffin. Thanks a lot."

On second thought, Mr. O'Leary, I think I'll skip my 1987 biennial M.B.T.A. ride. But I'll look forward to 1989. With fond personal regards, I am

Faithfully yours, as of yore and for aye,
David A. Mittell, Jr.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. "Beacon Hill Roll Call" records local representatives' votes on roll calls from House sessions on rules changes. The Senate has not yet held any roll calls.

(A "Yea" vote is for the package. A "Nay" vote is against it.)

APPROVE PACKAGE (H 1000)— House 142-1, approved the new package of House rules for the 1985-1986 session. Key provisions include an eight-year limit on the Speaker's term; easier discharge of bills from certain committees; written ballot ratification of committee chairs; and a new Committee on Personnel and Administration. Supporters said the rules would truly reform the House and give individual members more power. Opponents said the changes do not go far enough and still give the Speaker too much power.

Voting "Yea": Ambler, Bump, Hynes, Mann and Murray; not voting: Flynn.

PERSONNEL AND CONSULTANTS (H 1000)— House 117-34, rejected an amendment requiring the Speaker to twice annually release a list of all legislative personnel and consultants and details of their jobs and salaries. Amendment supporters said this important information should be readily available and will help weed out non-essential and no-show employees. Opponents said the information is already available from the personnel office and argued the new Committee on Personnel and Administration will help stop many abuses.

Voting "Yea": Mann and Murray; voting "Nay": Bump, Flynn and Hynes; Not voting: Ambler.

PARTY CAUCUS (H 1000)— House 117-34, rejected an amendment reducing from 25 to 10 the percentage of members necessary to call a party caucus. Amendment supporters said the 10 percent requirement would simply make it easier and help strengthen the caucus system. Opponents said the amendment goes too far and would result in many unnecessary caucuses.

Voting "Yea": Mann and Murray; voting "Nay": Ambler, Bump, Flynn, Hynes.

END DEBATE (H 1000)— house 109-44, rejected an amendment to require a two-thirds, instead of a majority vote, to close debate on a bill at a designated time. Amendment supporters said the two-thirds requirement would protect the minority and prevent the undemocratic shutoff of debate. Opponents said the change would allow a minority as small as 34 percent to engage in endless debate and prevent action on bills.

Voting "Yea": Mann and Murray; voting "Nay": Ambler, Bump, Flynn, and Hynes.

SMOKING (H 1000)— House 98-43, rejected an amendment to the eventually unsuccessful proposal banning smoking in the House chamber. The amendment would have allowed smoking in one section of the chamber. Amendment supporters said the compromise is fair and would create smoking and no smoking areas. Opponents said the chamber is wide open and claimed creating sections will not solve anything.

Voting "Yea": Murray; voting "Nay": Bump, Hynes, and Mann; Not voting: Ambler and Flynn.

VOICE VOTES (H 1000)— House 124-27, rejected an amendment requiring all voice votes to be by unanimous consent and providing that if a member objects, a standing vote must be held. Amendment supporters acknowledged that a member can currently demand a standing vote after any voice vote, but said this amendment goes a step further and automatically provides for a standing vote if there is not unanimous consent. They said voice votes are essentially useless and make it appear to the public that the Speaker is ramming something through the House. Opponents said the amendment is poorly drafted and unnecessary and could lead to different interpretations.

Voting "Yea": Mann and Murray; Voting "Nay": Ambler. Bump, Flynn and Hynes.

STEERING COMMITTEE (H 1000)— House 103-40, rejected an amendment allowing a majority caucus elected seven member Steering and Policy Committee, instead of the Speaker, to nominate candidates for committee chairs. The proposal calls for written ballot ratification by members and allows members to make nominations fairer and more open. Opponents said this system would become a popularity contest and said nomination by the Speaker and written ballot ratification by members is a better system.

Voting "Yea": Mann and Murray; Voting "Nay": Ambler, Bump and Hynes; Not voting: Flynn.

LATE VOTES (H 1000)— House 118-27, rejected an amendment prohibiting members from being recorded on a roll call vote once the vote has been closed. Amendment supporters argued it is wrong to allow voting once the vote is closed and said many members have abused this privilege. Opponents said members are often in other parts of the building and should have a chance to vote late.

Voting "Yea": Murray; voting "Nay": Bump, Flynn, Hynes and Mann; not voting: Ambler.

Meet Billy, he's a walking miracle

Commentary

By Judi Barrett

My eight-year-old son (the same one who knew Santa Claus would have to bring his new bike through the front door because it wouldn't fit down the chimney) came home from school two weeks ago with a small, green pencil sharpener shaped like a frog.

Before I could compliment him on his choice of purchase from the school store, he told me he won it for taking first place in a spelling bee. Tucked into his pile of papers from school was a note from his teacher, who explained that he had in fact taken first place in a spelling contest involving her classroom and the one across the hall.

Anyone would be happy for a little kid who wins in a competition like that. The closest I ever came in a spelling bee was runner-up and I have a mental block about the word that threw me out of the running for first place.

Well, it is a new year, and I cannot resist blowing a horn that has been mute for too long. This is a very special eight-year-old boy.

That he is eight and in third grade is pretty typical. But Billy is anything but typical. Billy is worth a book I cannot write and probably never will; I am too disorganized, and more to the point, too emotionally wrapped up in the experience of raising him, teaching him, trying to decipher him, and advocating for him. He is handicapped. I know it, school officials know it, his peers know it, my husband and children know it. Everyone but Billy "accepts" the facts of his "condition".

Billy ran the gamut of early childhood diagnoses. Some said he was autistic, but atypically so; others said he was severely retarded. When he was two and evaluated by a team of professionals at a Boston hospital, it was suggested that we look for a nice residential program for this little wisp of a child "who really will never amount to anything." We were told to be realistic, we were told to expect nothing; we were told that he functioned like a 10 to 12-month-old overall, except that his language development was virtually immeasurable because he had no language. Locked into a seemingly impermeable world, Billy chanted in a rhythmic monotone the early vowel utterances of a three to four-month-old infant. He was often lifeless, but could become thoroughly engrossed with spinning plates, spinning toys, flapping his hands before his face. If tickled, he laughed. If spoken to, he might as well have been deaf. If held he was either stiff or unresponsive.

Larger quantities of the same information became available when he was three and was again evaluated, this time by a special education team, since he could now profit from early intervention programs available under Ch. 766. A year's worth of chronological growth made virtually no difference in the range of his mental development. His highest measurable skill was in gross motor activities, where he managed to inch into the 15 to 18-month level of ability. As for his cognitive and language functioning, he remained well below the one-year level.

If anyone wonders why so much is spent on special education programs for handicapped children, if anyone questions whether the substantial sums budgeted for this purpose are worthwhile or effective, the answers can be found in children like Billy. The programs provided for him, especially in the early years when he traveled to Boston to attend a highly specialized day program, worked -- and they were expensive.

People who knew Billy when he was little simply shake their heads in disbelief when they see where he is today. He hasn't transformed into a "normal" child. He still relates to people in somewhat unusual ways. His language is still a little shaky, for despite the speed with which he has grasped and internalized concepts and vocabulary, there's a quality to the tone of his speech that reminds me of the echoing chants I used to hear from him three to four years ago. And when Billy has what we have come to classify as an "off" day, he is usually out of touch with much of what goes on around him. For that day, Billy is in his own world. But how different that world is today than it was when he was three.

Billy was never supposed to be able to talk; that was the last skill anyone in professional circles expected him to achieve. It was sign language that brought speech, but even the month before Billy said his first word, his neurologist told me it was "nice" that Billy had learned a few signs. "Everyone should know sign language, Mrs. Barrett. There are so many deaf people in the world." Billy will never speak, he said. "You are only making things much harder on yourself if you keep harboring these illusions."

The little boy who was never supposed to speak now reads himself to sleep every night. To describe him as an avid reader is an understatement. Billy is not especially captivated by human-interest types of stories, or adventures in which human dynamics are played out, which is interesting in light of his broader disability. But he can identify species of insects and birds and types of plants that the rest of us recognize only by the general category in which they fall. He informed me once last summer that the reason we have so many dragon flies around our property is that we also have lots of wasps. "Where did you get that idea?" I stupidly asked. The answer: "I read it in one of my insect books. Dragon flies eat wasp larvae."

The little boy who was never supposed to speak also writes wonderful stories. The little boy whom I was told lacked "body awareness" skills and adequate spatial relations capacity rides a bicycle better than I do. The little boy whom we were supposed to institutionalize to spare our family rides the bus to school, goes to a third-grade classroom with his chronological peers, gets special education services that have been invaluable, and thinks of his elementary school in Duxbury as an endless delight.

Inasmuch as an extremely intensive early childhood program in Boston paved the way for all of this, what has been equally important is mainstreaming. He is lucky to live in a town that has been willing to invest some creativity and enlightened thinking into his educational planning. The fact is that Billy's particular mainstreaming arrangement is unique. And the extent to which it is unique depresses me, because I have come to realize that well-planned mainstreaming, carried out by special needs and regular classroom teachers who truly understand learning processes and are willing to try anything, is the key to successful teaching of the vast majority of handicapped children.

Because of the complexity and extent of Billy's disabilities, especially in the early years but even at the age when peers attended kindergarten, he is a child who would have been endlessly relegated to a segregated class for handicapped pupils. His social skills weren't "age-appropriate," his language skills were far from "age-appropriate," so obviously, he couldn't assimilate himself into a classroom where eveyone else performs in "age-appropriate" ways. (Wrong.) Still, Billy was enrolled in kindergarten. He spent half a day in a regular kindergarten class -- with a classroom aide. He still didn't act like everyone else after a year (of course) and he certainly didn't speak the way they did. But he knew his letters, could combine them into simple words (like everyone else), and had mastered the expected math facts for entrance into first grade.

But he didn't belong in first grade, one teacher said. Sure, he had the academic skills, but he was so little, and still so disabled. Another year of kindergarten might take him into first grade with a better repertoire of "age-appropriate" social and language skills.

It was a combination of instinct and ignorance that led me to realize he would not come out of a second year of kindergarten a little more "like everyone else." To rely on the extreme weaknesses in Billy's handicap as the main criterion for placement seemed ridiculous --he would probably never act like a normal child. But he had learned so much from exposure to unimpaired peers, and had learned so much in kindergarten, it seemed bizarre to me to hold him back from a chance to excel at what he could clearly do well. Would one rob a normal child from the opportunity to participate in things he does well? Obviously, no.

Billy still has his classroom aide, although he relies on her less and less. People who don't know better would say she is his "crutch," except that inside the walls of this particular elementary school, the teachers and staff who have now had two-and-a-half years of experience with him know that is not true. She helps him organize himself, get through the kinds of daily transitions other kids make without difficulty, and focus him on the days when he just cannot focus himself. Had he been kept, instead, in a segregated classroom, he would not be producing the grade-level or better academic work he does because he wouldn't be taught it: kids who perform at grade level are in regular education, period. In sum, this mainstreaming provision -- and he is in the regular classroom for most of his day -- has given him help where his weakenesses most manifest themselves, but he has been simultaneously given the stimulation

by JOAN PINKHAM

Someone, somewhere always seems to be doing a survey, this one pigeon-holing us according to our eating habits. Of the 13,000 households polled, it seems that the largest group prefers meat-and-potatoes diet, not caring about calories, health, or being overweight, for they eat what their parents fed them as they grew up. For them, we have this recipe, another of Gloria Pitzer's adaptation of a Bundt cake from Neiman Marcus. So, to those who enjoy their sweets, we dedicate this

FRUIT COCKTAIL BUNDT CAKE

18-oz. box yellow cake mix
1-lb. can fruit cocktail — do not drain
3 eggs

Beat all three ingredients in 2-qt. mixing bowl using high speed, about four minutes, or till well combined. Grease 12-cup bundt pan and add batter, smoothing it out in pan evenly. Bake at 350 degrees about 55 min. to an hour, or till tester inserted into center of cake comes out clean. Cool cake in pan upright, on wire rack 15 min. Invert onto serving platter and drizzle with lemon icing. Chill two or three hours before slicing to serve. Serves 12 to 15.

The second category determined by the U. of New Hampshire survey concerns child-oriented households, typically middle class, about 25% of the population who eat to please their children. Everyone in this group can often be found pulling up the drive-in window to order hot dogs, french fries and soda pop. On nights when they do eat at home, they might be heard to mutter "where's the beef", aping the little lady on the TV ad. Well, in this recipe the "beef" is hidden in these refrigerated biscuits to make

SOMBRERO SURPRISES

1 tsp. salt, dash pepper
1 pkg. of 10 refrigerated biscuits catsup and mustard to taste
5 very thin slices onion
½ c. shredded lettuce
5 slices American cheese

Combine beef, salt and pepper into 5 patties about 3 inches in diameter. Brown on both sides in skillet and drain off fat. On lightly floured board, roll each biscuit to a 5 inch circle. Spread half the circles with catsup and mustard. Place beef patty atop each; add an onion slice, then lettuce. Cover with remaining circles of dough. Moisten edges press together with a fork to seal. Prick tops of each sandwich about 3 times with fork. Place on ungreased baking sheet. Bake in 375 oven for 10 to 12 minutes. Place a cheese slice atop each; return to oven till cheese melts, 2 to 3 min.

Fifteen percent of the group surveyed consists of those over age 55 who are preoccupied with their diet, watching salt and calories, eating fruit and skim milk. Also put at 15 per cent is the grouping of natural-food enthusiasts, who enjoy creative cooking, buying "wheat germ, yogurt and foods without preservatives or additives." They're the ones who will agree with Millie Carr who wrote 'Mmmmm" when she sent in this recipe for

HONEY OAT WHEAT BREAD

2½ c. buttermilk
½ c. honey
1/3 c. margarine
3½ c. unbleached flour
1½ c. rolled oats
2 pkg. active dry yeast
1 T. salt
2 eggs
2½ c. whole wheat flour
½ c. chopped nuts
2 T margarine, melted

Heat first three ingredients until very warm (120-130 degrees). In large bowl blend all purpose flour, rolled oats, yeast, salt, eggs and warm liquid. Beat 3 min. at medium speed. By hand, stir in whole wheat flour and nuts. Brush top with margarine. Let rise until doubled (45 min. approx.) Stir down and shape into two loaves. Place in greased loaf pans, 9x5". Bake at 375 degrees for 25-35 min. Remove from pans immediately.

Family wanted

I am a thirteen year old boy, living at a special needs school and I would like a ready-made family to live with—a foster father and foster mother and an older brother to play sports with.

I am still going to attend the same school on a day basis but I don't want to live there any more.

I am very good at sports and have won Special Olympics gold medals. People have told me I am a handsome, loveable boy and I like lots of people. I am always neat and clean and do okay in school. I would like a foster father to take me fishing and to ball games.

If you have room in your home for a child like me, please call Lorraine Riley at the Plymouth Department of Social Services, 585-6533.

Comprehensive training and support along with limited financial reimbursement and medical coverage are available to all foster families.

Meet Billy, he's a walking miracle . . .

and curriculum necessary to let him fly where he can succeed.

That is what I thought Ch. 766 was all about, but it still floors me when I hear educators speak of their amazement when they describe how "well" the "other children" relate, and have adapted, to Billy. The amazement exists for one reason: kids like Billy aren't normally mainstreamed, because we ask them to do what they cannot: we ask them to become "normal" in the areas where their handicaps are the most significant. Were the earlier criteria of social and language "age-appropriateness' still applied to Billy's eligibility for regular education, he'd still be waiting . . . and behaving in ever-more inappropriate ways because his myriad strong points would not be challenged.

To describe life with Billy now as rosy would be unfair. I have days when I feel like pulling my hair out, days when he is "off," days when he sings the same song over and over again, days when the remaining characteristics of his disability tax me beyond my limits. I sometimes feel as though I'm running a mini-version of a special needs school, and then I remind myself that what got me through my "illusion" about his capacity was the peculiar freedom I had in my ignorance. Had I been a trained special education teacher or a trained speech pathologist, I probably would have "given up" as I was instructed to . By any reasonable professional standards, by any checklist of development ability and by any set of prognostic assumptions, Billy wouldn't "make it."

So, I kept copious notes on everything he did, every sound he made, every sign he learned, every new element of growth, everything . . . for five years now. If the notes tell of his developmental history in minute increments, they also tell the story of my own experience -- my anxiety, my rage, my resentment, my enthusiasm, my pain, my outright worship of this child.

People frequently tell me that Billy is "lucky" to have a mother who would do battle for him, who would advocate for his educational rights, who would invest as much time as I have with school officials to create a special education program for him that is rarely found in any school system. I would have to say that if there is any luck to be found, it is for me. In the height of my intellectual snobbery, I thought being the parent of a handicapped child was the worst thing that could ever befall anyone. Children are all supposed to be Beautiful People, perfect, smart, talented, athletic, show pieces. Extensions of ourselves, reflections of us, as though they somehow confirm whether we are "good" or "bad" people.

Perhaps, ironically, it was my misplaced value system that fueled my "illusions" about Billy's potential. I guess I am still operating from that same value system: it took his winning a spelling bee for me to finally write something publicly about him. But I cannot conceal my pride. The fact, however unscientific, is that he's a walking miracle. To describe him as anything else is to short-change the work and the struggle and the stamina he has evidenced to assimilate himself in to the mainstream, whether in a reading group or on the playground in the midst of a football game. For his perseverance and, really, for his courage, none of us can take credit.

Brockton, which takes in 50 homeless persons each night, need money, supplies, and volunteer time to remain in operation. Anyone wishing to help in some way should call shelters to see what their specific needs are.

But even if there is a substantial increase in the amount of available, affordable housing in the South Shore, Hingham's Rev. Matthews notes there will always be homeless in need of a helping hand.

"There is always going to be a certain segment of the population that is going to choose to live outdoors or be in need of housing at one point or another . . . we need to be there to help when they ask for help."

Foremost, however, we need to work towards a greater understanding of the homeless, and realize that the majority of them are people who have just fallen on bad financial times.

"These people are human," said Nancy Powers of the Quincy coalition. "They're human with real needs. They're lonely and cold, and they're looking for someone to say 'I care.' If we start looking at them as human beings instead of bums, drunks, and good-for-nothings, we might open our eyes to a whole different world."

PATCHES by Lois MARTIN

What I'd give for a taste of that power. Just for an evening, in front of and exclusive of other people, I want to be the one with the television clicker.

Let me, for the length of a long movie, or better yet, during a highly contentious football game, lemme have it once.

When those gadgets first came out they were symbolic of important conveniences. The clicker was status, like time bake when you were the only one on the street to leave raw meat in the oven at 9 a.m. and return to a full course dinner at six. They've always been a mystery to me, electronic things like that. But I've never failed to be properly impressed by them. For a short spell I had a time bake, which backfired, either remaining raw in spite of my dial twirling or cooking too much at 10 a.m. in plenty of time to be cold and wizened by six.

Some of us are born to the magic of special possessions like clickers. In my naivete I used to think they were simply convenient. I understood that. It's astounding that a television set can seem right at the foot of the bed until it's time to turn it off. Mysteriously, the TV has advanced far to the other side of the room, at least as far away as the mailbox, and equally as magnetic when one is in her nightie and nearly into a full doze.

The primitive clickers had the on/off, volume and channel switch. Possessors could snuggle down deep in bed, with the television controls under the right palm and the electric blanket remotes under the edge of the pillow. It was, I used to muse, an affluent situation. That was when I was trying to work up courage to put my feet on the floor, actually out from under the blankets and race the distance to the television because I had no clicker.

But clickers have evolved into something far more than a convenience. They represent power.

A couple of months ago I was invited to visit dear friends of a Sunday afternoon. On would be, I knew, a football game, since he and she are equally responsive to that elliptical leather ball game. They carry on, debate, nearly come to jousting in their arm chair quarterbacking.

He is one of the most mild-mannered men I know. But I swear to you no emperor, not Caesar nor Nero, has the bearing of a man who owns two clickers. He keeps them both to his left. One of them is the archaic version which he uses infrequently.

The other is the new acquisition, the cable television accoutrement that comes extra.

But it surely repays in clout.

I'd be watching this cluster of men in blue and white, against another fat-shouldered crowd in white, orange and acquamarine. I'd be working best I could to choose a side I favored when suddenly I'd be watching guys in orange and black with another crowd in black and gold.

I'm the first to be too modest about my ineptitude in football. But this was the first game I'd seen where they switched squads right in front of you. There'd be snow and then none and then a mud field.

What was happening, as you know, is that this man with the power play finger was sending us through three different football games with the clicker.

Same with commercials. I'd just get the lingo going on Lite beer and a new car would be perched on top of a precipice. The clicker wasn't big on half-time stuff so he'd race through the other channels as an alternative. Now and then I caught a brief glimpse of Katherine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy or a nature movie flashing by on the screen or even something racy and provocatively unseemly. But there was no calling out to arrest the advance of the person with the clicker.

Whoever has it has the power. Sometimes they can be persuaded into raising or lowering the volume. They'll even switch channels between plays if you ask nice.

But I wanted the clicker. Not since I was the only one in the vet's office with the big dog amidst mere dachshunds and kittens have I inspired such sway.

It has occurred to me in watching people with their privately-owned clickers that the urge for power may be more readily satiable than we'd realized. I would like it, for example, if people who use their cars as dangerous weapons could have a clicker instead. A poor self image could be eliminated with clicker therapy. It proves you can change things, a lot.

And if I ever get one, it'll be a pandering football fan who gets me to switch from the Tracy/Hepburn movie I saw.

From the Garden

By Joan Pinkham

Dear, sweet January! Thirty-one endless days of the sniffles, snow plows filling in the driveway just shovelled, gutters festooned with icicles. About the only good thing that can be said about January is that it leads to February, which in turn leads to March and Spring.

The Wolf Moon is at its best when its brilliant silver light is reflected on a country covered with glazed snowdrifts, or at that magical twilight hour when it seems to rise up out of the sea. The Snow Moon will soon herald the end of a month when the thermometer roller-coasted up and down, confusing outdoor plants such as the azalea and rhododendrom which formed buds that almost seemed ready to burst into bloom. Bulbs such as daffodils and hyacinths timidly started to poke up in sheltered garden spots and until December's mild days gave way to frigid January, Marion Brown had chinese cabbage and spinach out of the garden, with Spanish Iris sending up six-inch shoots. Our recent blanket of snow may protect these outdoor plants and hopefully there will be enough unspent flowers left on forsythia and azaleas to make some kind of show in the spring. Even the birds were confused before the freeze set in, as cardinals snacked on the berries outside our kitchen window and a mockingbird stood guard over Marion's multiflora rose hips and Bev Litchfield had a pleasing medley of birds foraging in her yard, including white-throated sparrows, mourning doves, starlings, chicadees, titmice and English sparrows.

For those who enjoy gardening, it's a year-round hobby and though you won't find enthusiasts puttering around in the yard, some can be spotted down cellar, growing plants from seed under lights, others are tending their houseplants, or happy by the fire leafing through seed catalogues, planning to get their order in early. A very avid group gets together each January to swap seeds; an annual rite the Organic Gardeners will observe on Jan. 20 at the home of Charles and Dorothy Reeves at 7:30 p.m. All are welcome and are asked to bring their left-over seeds and finger food for the refreshment hour.

Devoted birders felt their day which began at sun-up on Dec. 30 was worth it all when the 1984 Christmas Bird Count turned in a count of one hundred species, the third highest ever recorded in the area. Their count of 34,211 individual birds was the second highest and the 25 birders who traipsed through marshes and thickets until dusk, were blessed with mild weather and calm winds. The six groups combed the coastline and backlands from Cedar Point Light in North Scituate down to Gurnet Light in Duxbury. Other highlights of the annual count as reported by Bob Fox were two Blue-gray Gnatcatchers. Considering the fact that only one of these birds (which looks like a mockingbird), has ever been reported in a Christmas Count, this was indeed a find. Warren Harrington, trip leader, also reports that for the second time in the 30 years of the Christmas Count, a Black and White Warbler was spotted, as well as a Goshawk, a first in the last 14 years. For the third time in 30 years, a Ring-necked Duck, Pied-billed Grebe, King Eider and Pine Warbler were seen. New high counts for individuals were: Gannet, 7 (plus 1), Mute Swan, 8, Ring-necked Duck, 8, Old Squaw, 56, King Eider, 3, Kingfisher, 9, Brown Creeper, 10, Cedar Waxwing, 141, Fox Sparrow, 5, Red-winged Blackbird, 11, 193. (See elsewhere for Fox's full report).

When we are geared to facing January's blizzards and watching the thermometer plummet, a welcome change of pace is being offered on Feb. 5. We have Priscilla Walsh of the South Shore Natural Science Center to thank for arranging a tour of some private greenhouses and their gracious owners for a morning sure to lift our spirits. Kay Lombard will dazzle you with masses of geraniums, orchids and calla lillies, while Harry Heineman, a member and lecturer at the Mass. Camellia Society, will have over one hundred in his greenhouse, acacia trees and a collection of proteas from South Africa. Ruth Russell's plant room is also used as a sitting room where one is surrounded with lillies, begonias, succulents and, with a little bit of luck, a night-blooming cereus in flower. Lavalie Hoss will offer a glimpse of such spring-time favorities as primroses, tulips, jonquils and freesia. There's a snow date of Feb. 7 for the car pool which leaves the Norwell Science Center at 10 a.m. and prepaid reservations are necessary.

How about those plants you received for Christmas presents? Follow the directions for growing and most of all, try to get more moisture in your rooms by setting your flower pots in pebbles at least an inch high. Water up to the tops of the pebbles. Most house plants do best in cool rooms. Inadequate light tends to make plants "leggy" in the winter. Cloudy winter days often result in poor houseplant growth and artificial light a few hours a day can be used to supplement the winter sun. Fluorescent lights can be hung from the cellar ceiling with pulleys to adjust them to the height of the plants. Even placing plants under lamps in the evening will be beneficial. Cold drafts, hot radiators and sunlight magnified through windows dry out houseplants, but even so, it's well to remember that over-watering is the cause of perhaps one-half the cases of plant failure.

Button up your overcoat and join in the nature walk being led by David Clapp, regional director of the Mass. Audubon Society. At 9 a.m. on Jan. 26 the walk will lead through the North Hill Marsh Wildlife Sanctuary in Duxbury. On Feb. 6, Kathleen Anderson, former director of the Manomet Bird Observatory, will lead the South Shore Bird Club in a trip to Marion. Please call Beverly Litchfield at 659-2559 for details.

CREATURE COMFORTS by Liz GORFINKLE

All kinds of unusual yet relevant questions float about our Mariner office. Most of them have to do with small town politics. A few of them have to do with ducks.

For instance, the other day a fellow reporter asked me if I knew what happened to ducks when ponds freeze over. She told me that when the surface of a pond near her home turned to ice, the waterfowl disappeared.

The majority of wild waterfowl which summer on the South Shore migrate at the onset of winter. But semi-domestic waterfowl, such as white geese and ducks, don't know how to migrate to warmer climes. And disabled wild birds can't leave, no matter how hard they try.

Other species of wild waterfowl we see in abundance during the winter are visitors from the North. They spend what we consider our cold months foraging along the coast in inlets, bays and harbors. They also inhabit free-flowing streams and open bodies of fresh water.

Members of some native wild species, like mallards, may decide to take up year-round residence. They are known to either scout their territory for stream-fed ponds that have open portions of water or paddle about in a particular pond to keep ice from forming.

A local bird expert told me that swans will crash their powerful bodies against the ice to break it up. Because of the swans' strength and ingenuity, poorly adapted or disabled birds can regain access to water.

Unfortunately, domestic waterfowl and mixed breeds often get frozen in the ice. Many of them have been brought in to the South Shore Wildlife Medical Center, Inc., Hingham, with frostbitten toes and webs. The center's staff suggests feeding birds seen stranded near frozen ponds because they have been cut off from their food supply. Mash, cracked corn or bread will do.

While you are feeding the birds, would you please keep an eye out for abandoned fishing line? The line can cut off circulation in wings, legs and feet, making it impossible for waterfowl to either swim or fly. Birds in this condition could hardly escape encroaching ice, even if they had the instinctive where-with-all to try.

Mostly, welcome to the salt, in the winter of '83/84 over four million tons of salt were spread out over U.S. roads. That may be good for traction, but what it can do to a car is downright ugly.
Ziebart Rust Protection safeguards new cars with exclusive sealants, tools, and techniques.
The lifetime warranty for new cars is backed by a national insurance company.
Come, to Ziebart now. Because the winter could make your car ugly. And nobody hates ugly more than Ziebart.

Books about diets

By Peggy Beals

"We live on one-quarter of what we eat. The doctor, dentist, and druggist live on the rest." Anon.

ABOUT DIET

'Shorelines', week of Jan. 7, had an interesting, possibly to some, absurd, article about Dr. Mincolla, nutritionist at Raskin Medical in Cohasset. He recommended an optimal health diet. "I'm amazed at how poorly advised people are. They don't know that six of the ten leading causes of death are related to our diet." He makes the point that people love well prepared nutritious foods, and do not feel deprived of the junk foods so prevalent in the standard American diet, sometimes referred to as S.A.D.

For more information on diet, several titles. Maggie Lettvin, Ch. 2's beautifully shaped exerciser, says it was Adelle Davis's "Let's Eat Right to Keep Fit" that started her on the way to good health. The 1954 classic is short, very readable, available in paperback. Lettvin in her "Maggie's Back Book" speaks of diet, also. Backs are a near epidemic locus of problems; reading Maggie's book won't hurt and could help. "Mega-Nutrients for Your Nerves" is more modern and detailed than Davis. H.L. Newbold is the author.

Jane Brody of the 'N.Y. Times' has published a cookbook with health emphasis. See also 'Prevention' magazine, and the 'Moosewood Cookbook' available in most health stores.

Helen, and her late husband Scott, Nearing were remarkable testimony to the effects of a good diet, building stone houses, roads, gardening, chopping wood, writing, lecturing when he was in his late 90s, she in the 80s. Her book "Simple Food for the Good Life" is full of good reading and easy vegetarian recipes of the sort they fed to the thousands who made a pilgrimage to their place.

"I'M TOO BUSY TO TALK."

The energetic Nearings bring to mind two other books. Elizabeth Yates "Call It Zest", zest being the vital ingredient after 70, is a group of interviews with people who give a good name to the later years. The people are enthusiastic, vital, rich in wisdom and experience. WGBH fm has a program Sundays at 6 p.m. about more such people.

"There's A Dance in the Old Dame Yet" by Harriet Robey describes her process of adjustment to widowhood and inevitable changes. It may hearten readers to soldier on until they, too, can echo mehitable, the scraggly old cat immortalized, with the help from Don Marquis, by archy the cockroach: "Toujours gai! There's a dance in the old dame yet!" (Archy wrote on a manual typewriter and could not work the shift key to make capital letters). Both Yates and Robey are in large print.

APPLEYARD AND TABER

These two immensely popular women wrote cookbooks for fun. They wrapped their recipes in endearing accounts of their families, friends, pets and observations. Louise Andrews Kent wrote several books about Mrs. Appleyard's Summer Kitchen, Winter Kitchen, Year, as well as some novels worth finding.

Gladys Taber lived in Conn. in winter, and Orleans, on the cape, in summer. She was a columnist in, I think, 'Family Circle' for some years. Her many books about Stillmeadow, and her dogs and cats came to an end with her death a few years ago, but are still being discovered by joy. Each published at least one big official cookbook.

MYSTERY WITH RELISH

A lighter, but still gustatory note, lest readers be startled by too abrupt a change of subject. "They're Killing The Great Chefs of Europe" by Nan Lyons is lots of laughs, mildly ribald. Peter de Vries fans would probably enjoy. Robert Parker's detective, Spenser, currently being elevated, or demoted, to film in Boston, has a proper respect for commestibles alongside detecting and other prowesses. Good writing, good mystery.

Of course the dean of palated sleuths is Nero Wolfe. Weight didn't concern him, he had plenty, and the descriptions of the dishes served him added a succulent dimension to Rex Stout's long list of Wolfe's adventures.

Bon appetit, and good reading!

Cohasset's not alone in fight for sewer funding

By Jane Lane

In the midst of an appeal to the federal government, the Cohasset Sewer Commission is enlisting the support of several Massachusetts towns.

After meeting in November with officials from the state Division of Water Pollution Control (DWPC) and the federal Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis observed that the state "has no intention, and never had any intention of funding" Cohasset's alternative wastewater disposal project.

The Cohasset Sewer Commission chairman wrote to 21 Massachusetts communities which find themselves in a situation similar to Cohasset. Calling the DWPC's refusal to fund the Cohasset project "a callous disregard of our needs," the commission has requested that the towns unite in appealing the state's position to the federal EPA.

Commission member Ted Guild said the letter, which was sent January 7 to the 21 towns, has received tremendous response and support. Several of the towns have contacted the Cohasset sewer officials and offered mutual support. Several local, state and national legislators have also been contacted for their input to the federal EPA, he added.

The letter stemmed from a meeting held November 21 between DWPC and EPA officials and the Cohasset Sewer Commission. It was during that session, according to Guild, that the state outlined their reasons for denying Cohasset the funding to construct small diameter collector sewers and on-site system repairs.

DeSantis later composed a letter which was mailed to 21 other communities throughout the state that have been delegated to an "extended position of the state's priority list for funding" wastewater disposal systems. Each of the specified towns are in the process of applying for state funds to construct alternative wastewater disposal systems.

In a related issue, the town received a three-month bill from the Sewer Commission's legal counsel for a total of $8695.75. That just about depletes the balance of $8867.19 from the amount appropriated for legal expenses by special Town Meeting in September.

Commissioner Guild said that attorneys from Goodwin, Proctor and Hoar are compiling an estimate of the legal costs which will be necessary to complete the funding appeal to the EPA. Whatever estimate is completed will be included as an appropriation request for the April town meeting. "Whatever the estimate," Guild noted," the cost will certainly be less than if we went ahead with the first project (the main wastewater treatment plant)."

In the commission's letter to the Massachusetts' towns, DeSantis stated, "We wish to bring a matter to your attention.

"On November 21, 1984, representatives from Cohasset met with U.S. EPA Region 1 officials and representatives from the Massachusetts DWPC concerning Cohasset's appeal to the EPA regarding, among other things, DWPC's categorical refusal to fund the small diameter collector sewers and on-site repairs included in Cohasset's facility plan.DWPC's representative stated that this policy is being applied not only to Cohasset, but throughout the Commonwealth, and, accordingly, it may affect your town.

"At this meeting, the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering's (DEQE) chief engineer stated

Proposal: Keep Town Hall stage

If selectmen agree with the recommendation of the Town Hall Study Committee, the historic stage within the auditorium will remain intact.

The committee, appointed by selectmen to study the desperate need for more office and meeting area within Town Hall, prepared a status report last week.

Although selectmen last summer discussed the possibility of razing the auditorium stage to accommodate needed space for office and meeting rooms, the study committee developed an alternative solution.

Selectmen at that time seemed split as to how to provide adequate space for an increasing number of municipal employees, while maintaining the stage that has been a rich part of Cohasset's heritage. Rocco Laugelle has been a strong advocate of retaining the stage in its entirety.

At a public hearing held by the committee last fall, several residents voiced strong opposition against the conversion of "any or all of the auditorium into office space," the members wrote. Among the more vocal opponents of plans to dismantle the stage were members of the Cohasset Dramatic Club. For the past 63 years, that club has performed drama and comedy upon the Highland Avenue stage.

In an attempt to resolve the situation, the study committee recently undertook a second space-needs analysis of Town Hall office employees. The survey contained questions pertaining to desired office location, in consideration of available room. Their conclusion was that an addition should be constructed to the rear extending to the right.

According to the committee member Tony Fasciano, Chairman Benjamin Blake has prepared a preliminary sketch of the addition. This will be presented to selectmen at their Feb. 11 meeting.

The committee members unanimously decided that the addition will accommodate the desired space requirements and blend in with the existing structure.

The committee has not yet developed time or cost estimates, although those findings will be submitted to selectmen in the near future.

Selectmen remained concerned this week about the need for additional meeting areas, as well as office space. They wondered if the auditorium could be used adequately as a meeting room, perhaps by partitioning it.

"Whatever we do, let's do it right," selectman Mary Jane McArthur noted. She added that whatever the plans, there must be provisions for adequate meeting areas for the town's numerous committees and boards.

A look at US education

The Cohasset League of Women Voters painted a grim picture of the American Public School System at a fact finding meeting Thursday, Jan. 31.

Member Doris McNulty provided the League with statistics that put American kids at the bottom of the academic scale in Math, Science, Civics and Foreign Languages. Before presenting these figures McNulty warned that the studies from which she took her information are somewhat dated. She said, however, that while some of the specifics may have changed, the general outlook is probably still the same.

According to McNulty in a 1979 test of Math proficiency in high school, or equivalent-aged children, American kids scored the lowest while kids from Israel, Japan, Germany and France did the best.

In a 1979 test of Math proficiency in 5th grade children from Taiwan, Japan and the U.S., not one of the highest scores of the U.S. students was better than any of the lowest scores of the Japanese students.

In Civics tests where 14 year old students were asked to demonstrate a knowledge of their own political systems, U.S. Students ranked in the middle, with kids from France, Germany, and the Netherlands scoring highest, and those from Ireland and Italy scoring lowest.

In similar tests of high school seniors, U.S. and Irish students tied for last place while those from Germany, Switzerland and New Zealand came out on top.

McNulty noted that the low American scores are paralled by the relatively low number of courses required for graduation from American schools.

European Schools in general place a greater emphasis on Science and Math than do American schools.

The emphasis on Science, explained McNulty, is also very high in Japan and the U.S.S.R. In Japan about $21 billion is spent yearly on education and the promotion of science programs. "That" remarked McNulty, "is two times what they spend on national defense."

Europeans place a greater emphasis on foreign languages as well. In America, only eight states require public schools to offer foreign languages, while none require that students take them.

In England five percent of students take secondary languages in elementary school. From age 11 on 85 percent of students study foreign languages for three

Watershed maps

The engineering firm selected to complete the study of the Watershed Protection District has notified the town that additional detailed maps of the watershed limits will cost about $3900.

According to Thomas Cheyer, vice president of Camp, Dresser and McKee, the firm will delineate the watershed limits for the Lily Pond, Sohier Station wellfield, and the Elms Meadow wellfield on new copies of the town's base map.

The company will also complete the mapping work for a fee not to exceed $3900, according to Cheyer. This will include an estimated cost for the purchase of new mylar originals (one entire set of 68 maps). Cheyer also noted the company will complete the mapping work within 30 calendar days of receipt of notice to proceed, or of completion of the aquifer and watershed delineation as proposed by CD, in the Watershed Resources Management Plan study. That study, which was approved by the special fall town meeting, will cost the town $20,000.

There is an article in the April town meeting requesting a maximum of $4,000 to complete the detailed watershed limit maps.

SEMASS response

The president of SEMASS, the trash-to-energy solid waste disposal program, notified the town that the facility will be built, although at a slightly higher cost than originally anticipated.

George Mallin, in a letter to selectmen, stated that the title SEMASS has been changed to the Council of SEMASS Communities. He also noted that because of the state's recent mandate to comply with acid gas control requirements, the cost of constructing the conversion facility will be higher than originally anticipated. Mallin said there was no estimate of the rate hike, which will be passed onto all 35 potential community contributors. The association will be re-submitting an application for the Air Quality Permit in mid-March, he stated, and until all further technical questions are resolved, "we will not be in any better position to clarify for the communities the expected cost of compliance with the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) acid gas control requirements."

Mallin also stated that 24 communities have submitted positive responses to join the Council of SEMASS Communities. Also, in December, the SEMASS Partnership successfully closed on a $110 million Industrial Development bond, which is in a trust account until receipt of the DEQE Air Quality Permit. According to Mallin, "the equity commitment necessary to complete the financing of the $150 million Waste-to-energy project is expected to be available once the permit has been received by DEQE."

Dumpster regulations opposed

Daniel Leahy, manager of Kimball's by the Sea, criticized the Board of Health's recent initiated dumpster regulations.

Leahy complained that without public notification, the Board voted to establish a new "tax" under the disguise of a "new fee." He questioned the Board's authority to implement the new fee, and questioned "the reasoning and justification behind your action."

The Board voted last month to implement new regulations pertaining to registering dumpsters and commercial haulers. Annual fees for the registration are $15 each. Health Agent Joseph Godzik noted that the Board has received no complaints about the regulation other than Leahy's.

In the letter to the Board of Health, Leahy stated, "It seems to me that we have plenty of available resources to follow rather than resorting to the creation of new taxes.

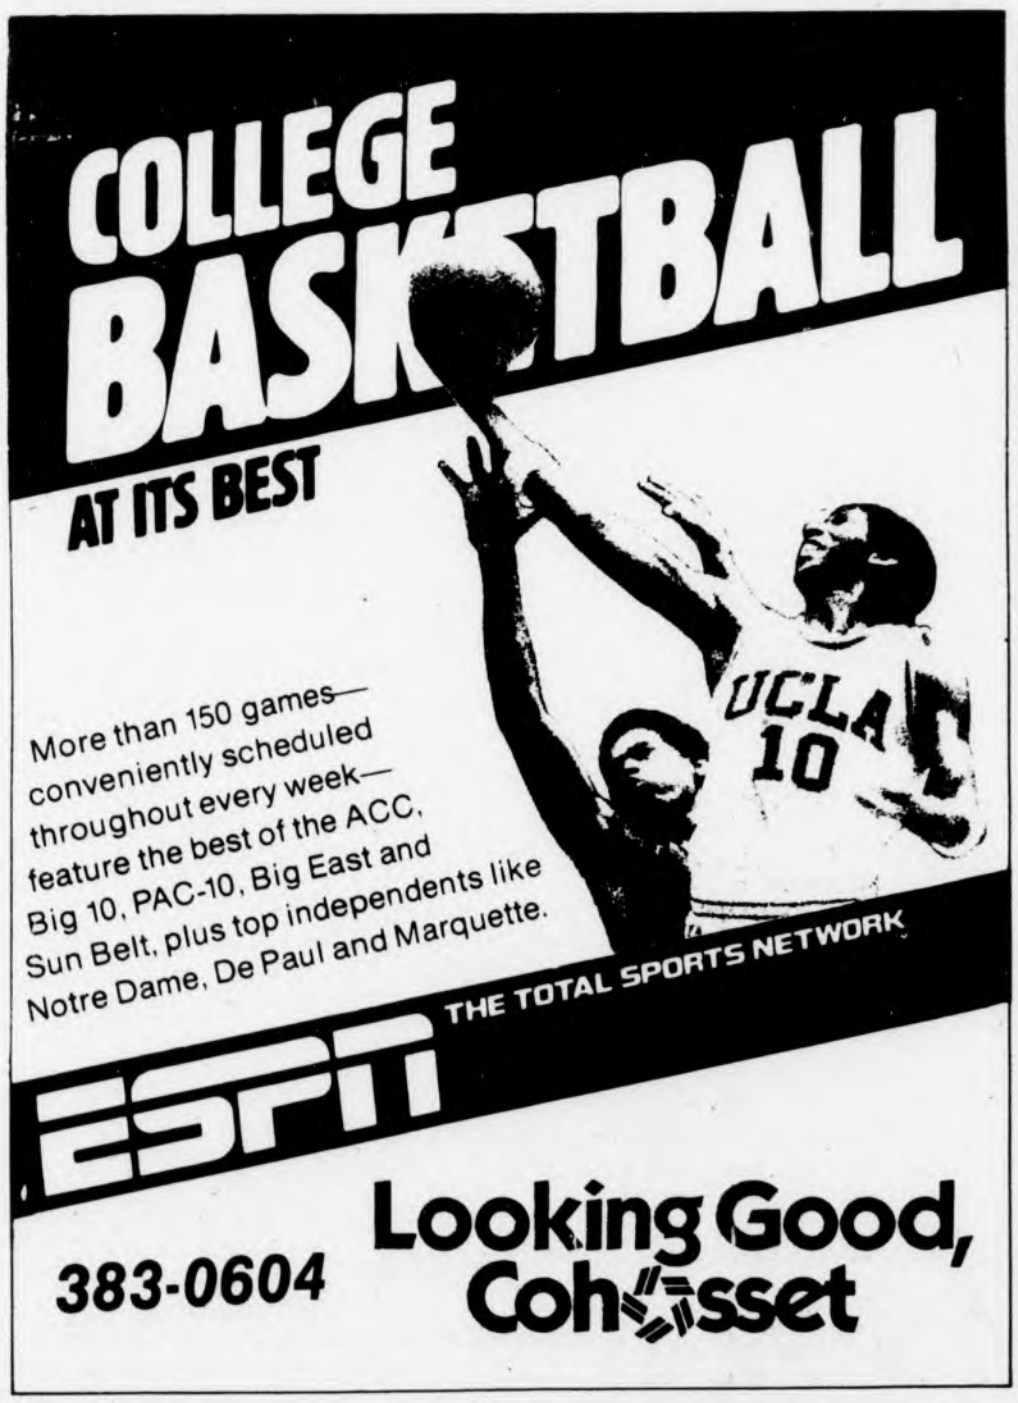
If a business is not in compliance with the health regulations of the town, Leahy suggested the Board currently has jurisdiction over the individual or company. If noise is the problem, Leahy added, the police would be the agency concerned with the matter. He also noted that an 11 p.m. curfew on outside dumping is not reasonable.

"Without a public hearing or any apparent legal precedent, I feel it was an ill-pursued and inaccurately enacted (ruling)," he added.

Leahy concluded his letter to the Board of Health by requesting that the members reconsider the vote, and solicit some participation and information from local businesses. 'I am sure if we were, as a whole, more aware of our alleged operational deficiencies, and your particular concerns, communication would accomplish significantly more thanarbitrarytaxation without representation," Leahy concluded.

New postage rates

The cost of mailing a first-class letter will rise to 22 cents beginning Sunday, Feb. 17, when new postage rates go into effect, Postmaster Edward Fonseca reminded customers today.



The 22 cent first-class rate and increases for other classes of mail, approved in December by the Governors of the Postal Service, take effect at 12:01 a.m. Sunday, Feb. 17.

"However," Postmaster Fonseca said, "customers should not wait until then to make their stamp purchases. Now is the time to buy to avoid unnecessary lines once the new rates become effective."

A new "D" stamp is now on sale at all area post offices. The "D" stamp bears the letter "D" instead of a denomination and has a postage value of 22 cents, the new rate for one ounce of first-class domestic mail. The green and white stamp features an eagle with the legend "US Postage" beneath it. The letter "D" appears beside the eagle.

Also included in the design are the words "Domestic Mail" to remind mailers of its intended use. The "D" stamp cannot be used on international mail," Postmaster Fonseca cautioned. "Mail destined for foreign countries and bearing "D" stamps will be returned to senders.

"Any remaining supply of 20 cent stamps that mailers have on hand may, of course, be used, "Postmaster Fonseca said, "as long as they are combined with one- or two-cent stamps to meet the new 22 cent first-class rate."

years, and 40 percent for four years or more. By their ninth year of school French students are required to take at least two foreign languages. In the U.S.S.R. almost all students are studying a foreign language by the second grade. Study of at least one foreign language is required by the universities and two or three by graduate schools.

Figures like these, said McNulty, were examined in a 1983 review of the American Public School System by the Presidential Commission to study education. The result of the study was a report entitled "A Nation at Risk."

This report, explained McNulty, later provoked a number of subsequent studies, and revived education as an important issue. "It gave it the stamp of Presidential force" said McNulty. "It gave impetus to a renewed look at what was going on."

Member Judy Volungis also provided the League with some discouraging figures. She reported that enrollment in Cohasset's Public Schools has dropped about four percent in the past year. This, she explained is part of a continuing downward trend that began in 1973 in the Kindergarten and First Grades. Since that year total enrollment in the schools has dropped from 1992 to 1245.

Volungis explained that this drop was due in part to smaller families and in general the high cost of living.

She noted that some of the empty seats can be filled by children from the MEDCO program. MEDCO, or the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunities, is a state funded voluntary desegregation program.

The League spoke briefly about Governor Michael Dukakis' four-year plan for Excellence in Education. They pointed our that since his bill did not pass last year, the process must begin again from scratch.

Republican Council Meeting

The 10th Congressional District Republican Council held its first general meeting last Wednesday at the Howard Johnson's Motor Lodge in Kingston with an attendance of near 100 Republicans from throughout the district.

Many homeowners are striving for maintanance free homes by installing aluminum gutters. I recommend Alcoa gutters and downspouts. They are designed to be trouble free and require no painting or costly repairs.

Alcoa's free floating hanging systems permit expansion and contraction as the weather changes. All their hanger systems are concealed; spike and ferrules should not be used. Alcoa's rivets and gutter seal is the most leak proof method of joining gutters. Alcoa adds Alumalure finish not found in other seamless gutters. This specially developed enamel strengthens the aluminum and creates a finish that will not chip, crack or peel. This finish is available in both dark brown and sandstone.

For a long lasting, good looking gutter system, ask for Alcoa building products. Remember that a State Builder's License and insurance are required by law.

Advisors review Fire and Police clerical budgets

The board of selectmen met Tuesday night with the advisory committee to discuss the budgets of those departments under the jurisdiction of the selectmen, specifically the police and fire departments.

The key issue to both departments was the allocation of funds for clerical help.

Selectmen recently advised Police Chief Joseph Kealy to include $12,667 in his budget for full-time clerical services. Advisory committee chairman, Jacqueline Dormitzer, felt that the department should have included clerical help in the budget that the board's subcommittee originally reviewed. "I'm concerned about these last minute items that are adding many dollars," she said.

Selectmen Chairman Clifford Mitman explained that both committees reviewed the budget at virtually the same time due to a "crunch of timing." Nonetheless, Mitman noted, there are a number of clerical duties being neglected at present in the police department. Among these are record keeping, report filing, and typing. "Records in this town are terrible," agreed Selectman Frank England, "and it's because we have not given people the proper money to do the job."

Mitman added that the lack of secretarial help forces the officers to do the work, taking time away from their other duties. "Without clerical help," he said, "we're affecting the efficiency of both departments."

Dormitzer pointed out that the department hired a secretary several years ago, but had to end the service due to troubles with the union. Advisory board member Jim Lagrotteria noted that the more recent proposal to hire a dispatcher met with similar opposition. "Maybe it would be better," said Dormitzer, "to bring this up after the contract is settled."

Mitman stated that the dispatcher proposal failed because it had not been taken through the proper channels. England added that the issue of clerical help had been discussed at an open meeting with no subsequent response from the union.

The advisors asked if funds for clerical services could be taken from elsewhere in the budget. Selectmen felt that this was not possible without compromising the efficiency of the department.

The advisors will take the request under consideration.

Chief Kealy also requested an additional $5,000 for custodial services. The issue was referred to the personnel board.

Fire Chief Martin Dooley asked for $6,000 for part-time clerical services.

According to Dooley, there are 26 job areas in the department which require secretarial assistance. Eight of these, he explained, are currently being handled by on-shift officers who are in turn unavailable for training.

Other clerical work, said Dooley, is taken to the selectmen's office, or completed by his wife.

Items include: letters to the fire prevention officers, Edison Department reports, Red Cross correspondence, billing, annual reports, and budgets. All of this, noted Dooley, is work which "has to be done. We don't make that work," he said, "that work is earmarked."

Dooley pointed out that the department has been level funded for the past few years, and is greater in general size and number of employees than some of the departments which do have clerical help.

Selectman Dick Horne asked if the town could expect a reduction in overtime costs as a result of the clerical aid. Dooley said that this would definitely be the case.

Mitman stated that he did not think that Chief Dooley's wife should be doing work for the department. He explained that the department's records should not leave the building.

According to Dormitzer, $96,000 of Chief Dooley's personal services budget is financed by the federal government. President Reagan, she said is going to cut that amount, leaving the town to absorb the cost through tax increases. The town cannot, however, raise its taxes more than 2.5 percent. "I don't know where the money is going to come from," she said.

Mitman stressed the importance of clerical help in maintaining an efficient department. "We understand the restraints," he said, "but we've also got to be aware of what it takes to run the department."

Boards review budget

In other business, the committees discussed the board of selectmen's budget. The advisory board approved a $10,000 allocation for collective bargaining, and a capital outlay of $1,450 plus $21 a month for a postage meter.

Selectmen also requested a capital outlay of about $1,700 for a word processor. According to selectmen's secretary, Janet Chalke, the machine could be used to "cut down on the repetitive work. The processor would be capable of doing licensing work, typing the minutes of meetings, and producing perfect copies of form letters with specific.

Mitman suggested that other departments could use the machine to do similar repetitive tasks. He stated that the word processor would be worth its cost in the "the added efficiency that it's going to mean."

Level-funded budget

The advisory committee voted Tuesday night to approve level funding for the pension and cemetery departments and the Council on Aging.

Other budgets approved include the harbor, weights and measures, trees and parks, debt services, and law and legal departments, as well as the zoning board of appeals.

The harbor department budget is level funded in personal services and represents slight increases in general expenditures for building and boat maintenance, and gasoline. The total budget is $33,560.

The weights and measures budget represents a 50 percent increase in salary from $500 to $750. The board felt this was a well-deserved raise. General expenditures for this department totalled $350.

The debt services budget represents the biggest budget increase at 36 percent and is one over which the board has no control. The budget totals $413,537, $59,424 of this from the school department. Dick Horne suggested that in the future, the debts be allocated to the responsible departments so that they would feel the effect of their loans.

Both the zoning board of appeals (ZBA) and the trees and parks department are level funded for personal services, accounting for annual step-rate increases. General expenses for the ZBA total $1,980, representing a $500 cut in engineering services. General expenses for the trees and parks department total $22,935, the only significant increase being in garage rental; $2,400 to $3,600.

The law and legal department budget totals $73,000, a significant drop from last years figure of $94,000.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

STAYING HEALTHY

By eliminating nerve interference, chiropratic care may not only correct numerous health problems, but also may prevent many conditions from developing. This enables the body to maintain its natural, inborn resistance to illness and disease. For continuing good health, the best answer is preventive health care. In conjunction with a program of regular spinal adjustments, chiropractic advocates the basic formula of proper nutrition, adequate exercise, sufficient rest, good posture and positive attitude. For you to have a longer, healthier and happier life, it is imperative that you understand the relation between vertebral subluxations (misalignments) and its ill affects in the rest of the body. Nerve messages must be allowed an unimpeded flow to maintain good health.

Chiropractic is a natural, drugless and knifeless approach to addressing the health considerations of your body. With proper and periodic attention, existing problems can be dealt with, and other conditions may be prevented from developing. For your needs today and to help your future health goals, we invite you to call the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12. Our personal concern is your health. Therefore we accept only those patients we sincerely feel we can help. Many insurance plans accepted as well as Workers Comp. cases. Tel. 383-1211, 1214. We offer daily office hours by appointment.

Cohasset school sports news

By Lisa Shumaker

GIRLS BASKETBALL

The girls started off the week slowly, losing to a fired-up Whitman/Hanson team, 46 to 44. Unfortunately, the ball would not fall through the hoop for Cohasset, and the team had some bad breaks.

Carla Lucas led the Skippers on both the offensive and defensive end of the court, scoring 19 points and showing great intensity and hustle throughout the entire contest. With 14 points, Tracy Fitzpatrick followed Carla in scoring and had an impressive game as well.

Cohasset bounced back from this tough defeat to trounce Abington Friday, 62-45. Coach Bill Fallon felt the key to the victory was the Skippers' outstanding team defense.

Carla Lucas once again outscored all her teammates with 16 points, and Tracy Fitzpatrick was not far behind with 13. Fallon also cited Anne O'Leary as having an excellent game for the Skippers.

Cohasset has a rough schedule coming up ahead of them this week. Tuesday the girls will take on Duxbury who will very likely be a challenge for the Skippers. Fallon feels his team's game against Norwell will decide the league championship. Cohasset lost to this team, but Fallon feels they have the talent to beat Norwell and make the contest very exciting.

ICE HOCKEY

After being idle for a week, the boys came out flat and were defeated by Rockland, 7-3. Coach Richard Izzo feels his team was sluggish because of the lay off.

Troy Chatterton, Todd Fitzpatrick and Philip Mahoney all scored for the Skippers. Izzo also mentioned Philip Mahoney as having a "stupendous game."

Saturday Cohasset tied Whitman-Hanson, 7 to 7. Izzo was pleased with the way his team skated and kept the puck moving.

Alex Ghetto led all Cohasset scorers with a hat trick and had an exceptional game. Todd Henry, Jeff Hartwell, Troy Chatterton and Todd Fitzpatrick all picked up goals as well.

Wednesday the boys will travel to Duxbury and will attempt to beat this team whom they tied previously this season. Saturday, Cohasset faces the toughest team in the league, Scituate, which will prove to be an extremely difficult challenge for the Skippers, but Izzo feels his team is up to this test.

GYMNASTICS

Wednesday the girls lost to Scituate, 122.9 to 103.5. Despite the loss, Coach Andrea Palardy was very proud of her team for achieving their goal of scoring over 100 points. Palardy felt all of the members on her team have continued to show much improvement this season as Wednesday's results show.

Individually, Jane deLima was third overall, picking up third places on the beam, bars and floor exercises. Jane also came in second on the vault.

Monday, Norwell is scheduled to come to Cohasset. However, the Skippers have been suffering from equipment problems, and this meet will more than likely be postponed. Wednesday the girls will travel to Rockland. Palardy is very optimistic about this meet and believes strongly that her team will be victorious.

WRESTLING

Look for wrestling results in the next issue. Next week the boys will take on Rockland Monday, and Cape Cod Tech Wednesday.

BOYS BASKETBALL

The boys basketball team continued their winning ways with two convincing wins over Whitman-Hanson 91-49 and Abington, 84-59.

Against Whitman-Hanson, Dave MacDonald set career highs with 21 points, ten rebounds and six steals. Tony Bogarty scored 21 points and had 12 assists and Center Jim Creed scored 20 points, had 16 rebounds and blocked eight shots.

Bryan Edwards returned to action against Abington, recovering from a back injury and scored 25 points and picked up ten rebounds.

The 15-0 Skippers and 12-0 in the South Shore League were also aided by Bogarty who scored 19 points and handed out 10 assists. Creed scored 14 points and collected 11 rebounds.

Coach Ed Minelli also praised junior guard Todd Trautwein who scored six points and the play of Bobby Schultz and Phil Bernstein.

On a scale of 1-10 with ten points the highest caliber of play, Minelli said his team is playing around a 7.5 "We're starting to hit peak efficiency." Playoffs are just around the corner as the regular season ends in a week.

Gymnast Mary Beth McMann performs during competition last week.

VoTech budget/fees cut

Responding to local pressure, the South Shore Regional School Committee voted to shave $22,500 from the school's non-instructional budget and include a projected $65,100 increase in state aid to the school.

This action dropped the fees charged to member towns by a total of $87,600.

School Supt. Clifford Easton told the committee that the reductions were "scraping the bottom of the barrel," and that he would not recommend cuts that would affect educational programs.

The rise in state aid reflects figures released last week by Gov. Michael Dukakis, but which have not yet been approved by the State Legislature. Easton said that a second Dukakis announcement, to freeze state reimbursements (Chapter 70 funds) at last year's levels, will add $149,000 to the towns' assessments.

"We counted on that money when we began making budget growth projections four years ago," said treasurer Robert Kelley. "This is money we are entitled to and it's not fair that we won't be getting it."

He said that three other regional school districts were also adversely affected by the state's position.

Easton and Kelley said they planned to fight the freeze in the so-called Chapter 70 funds, but did not specify how. If their challenge is successful, it would dramatically reduce the increase the towns are now being asked to shoulder.

The budget earlier called for an overall 21 percent increase with a 37 percent hike in the towns' assessments. This was given a cold reception by member communities and threatened with defeat. Last week's decision reduces the assessment increase to an average of 29.7 percent over last year.

The new totals for member towns are as follows: Cohasset, $18,588, down $2,726; Hanover, $179,095, up $48,592; Norwell, $84,399, up $3,714, and Scituate $121,813, up $24,403.

The committee promised to continue its efforts to reduce the figures, but said it is constrained by law to have submitted a budget figure by Feb. 1. Easton said the approved budget figure of $3,130,026 can be revised downward but not upward between now and July 1 when the new fiscal year begins.

Lloyd Patriquin of Whitman told his colleagues at the meeting his town's finance committee and selectmen had told him that while they sympathized with the school's financial plight, they would have trouble accepting the budget.

At 48 percent, Whitman's share of the increase is the second highest among the towns. "By working to reduce the budget, we are showing the towns that we are making a good faith effort to accommodate their concerns," said Patriquin. He said this should make the towns more receptive to the budget.

Under consideration is a proposal to issue bonds to cover capital expenses. This would help the towns avoid spending large sums to pay for this year's expenses, but would require large interest payments over the next five years. The committee is now split over the relative merits of a bond issue.

Because the interest payments would represent built-in budget increases for four more years, "A bond issue would lock us into no real budget increase for five years," said Robert Molla of Norwell. "We'd be mortgaging our budget and I think the towns have to look beyond this year."

"It's a quick fix and it sounds great because it would reduce this year's assessments," said Joan DeGeorge Schirmer of Scituate. But she said the interest payments would "seal the coffin" on the next four budgets.

If the committee decides to request a bond sale, the towns have 45 days within which to hold a public meeting to vote on the sale. A bond issue must be approved by all eight member towns.

BOOKING AND BUYING

Due to inflation and today's fluctuating currencies, if you can lock up a booking at one price, the chances are that you will be getting a bargain at trip time. In general, fares are secure at the time of purchase, not at the time of booking. If you pay for a ticket in February for an August flight, the price holds even if the fare goes up. However, if you merely book in February, and prices zoom up by August when you actually buy the ticket, the August price is the one you pay. Also don't fret about buying a ticket before a price war. Most airlines will issue refunds if prices go down.

At COLPITTS TRAVEL CENTER, we endeavor to seve you every way we can. From a plane trip to Chicago, or a business trip overseas, we can arrange all the details. All you need do is pack. We can make bookings for all airlines, hotels, steamship and rail companies incuding Amtrak. So drop in and visit with us soon. The Law and You

PROXIMATE CAUSE

A key element in a successful negligence suit is the connection between what one did and the injury that supposedly resulted from that act. The individual suing must prove that the other caused injury to his person or property. He has the "burden of proof." He must prove that the alleged negligent person was responsible for the damage suffered, that it was the "proximate cause" of the injury. Some courts, in trying to decide whether an act was the proximate cause of subsequent damage, have applied what is called the "foreseeability test." They hold that negligence was not the proximate cause unless the consequence was one that, in the light of all the circumstances, a reasonably prudent man could have forseen as a probable result of his action or his failure to act.

To obtain the most favorable result in your claim for damage, the facts must be presented clearly as well as in a manner that unequivocally portrays the innocence of your position and the negligence of the other party. Experience, professionalism and knowledge of precendent setting legal matters are vital to this outcome. LAW OFFICES OF RICHARD PRICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Rt. 3A, Cohasset, 383-9882. Call for an appointment.

☐On Jan. 14, Brian A. James, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip M. James, 39 Susan Lane, North Haven, CT. and grandson of Mr. Robert B. James, 12 Ripley Rd., left Kennedy Airport for the Soviet Union with 20 other Colby College students for their January Plan, 1985.

Brian is in the Class of '85, a Senior, and an Economics Major at Colby College.

The tour will include stops in Helsinki, Leningrad, Tbilesi, Moscow and Tallin before arriving back in the USA Feb. 4, 1985.

☐Miss Carla S. James, Freshman, has attained Dean's List Status for the Fall Semester, 1984, at Wheaton College, in Norton. Carla is very active on campus participating in the Wheaton Key, a member of the Outing Club and the Biology Club. She also houses students overnight who are interested in Wheaton College and gives them tours of the campus.

☐Birthday greetings (actually it already occurred Feb. 5), to Letitia Jorda n. This birthday message was brought to you by daughter Rebecca, 11, a student at the Deer Hill School.

☐ Koren A. Lipsett, a senior from Cohasset, has received highest honors for the fall term at Skidmore College, a coeducational, liberal arts institute in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. She is the daughter of Mrs. Valerie A. Lipsett of 85 Elm St.

Highest honors are awarded for a quality grade point ratio of 3.6 or more from a possible 4.0.

☐ Annie Henry, a 7th grader at Cohasset Junior High School, placed fourth in the Junior Senior New England Championships in Synchronized Swimming Sunday, Jan. 27 at the Worcester Y.W.C.A.

Annie, who is 12, was one of the youngest swimmers entered in the meet. The girls must be 12 years old as of Jan. 1 to qualify, and their ages ranged from 12 to 20.

The swimmers must execute six figures and perform a routine. Annie placed fourth from 19 junior swimmers in the figure portion of the competition and also placed fourth in the solo category. She swam a 3 and a half minute routine to musical selections from "Gigi." Her mother, Mrs. Wm. Henry, choreographed her routine and is her coach.

Annie is a member of the advanced synchronized swim team at the South Shore Y.M.C.A. in Quincy. Her mother coaches this team and also is a New England Synchronized Swimming Judge.

☐ Notre Dame Academy Honor Roll students from Cohasset are: Junior Lynne Barry, First Honors; and Freshman Georgann Hanlon, Second Honors.

☐ Happy Birthday, thirteenth that is, to Shawn McCarthy, who celebrated it last week. That is the same Shawn that I spoke about last week who had his appendix out. This week I spelled his name properly, I'm sorry Shawn.

☐ Congratulations to James C. Kirk, who has been promoted to division business manager, Cranberry Division, at Ocean Spray. Mr. Kirk was with the Gillette Company before joining Ocean Spray.

☐ Cohasset High School was in the headlines twice in the Boston Herald last Sunday . . . Jillian Ayer was featured in the "Style" Page, where Eleanor Roberts did a lengthy column on her. It told all about Jillian's dress mode, and the fact that she was voted "best dressed" for 1985 by her senior class.

☐ "Eddie and the Cruisers" received headlines under High School sports, complete with a nifty picture of the team. One wonders which of the teams that Coach Minnelli will play first, after they "accept the challenge" . . . those three schools do play in division I . . Sure is great to see Cohasset basketball getting all of thw well-deserved ink!

☐ While on the subject of basketball, have been asked to be sure to tell about the Harlem Magicians' appearance at CHS on March 17 at 3 p.m. It is being sponsored by the Basketball Boosters, and is featuring the "legendary" Marques Haynes (the world's greatest dribbler) vs. the Cohasset All-Stars. The Cohasset Recreation Basketball will have a preliminary program at 2 p.m. There are two price ranges: the advance sales are $5 for adults and $4 for students. You can get your tickets at the boys' varsity home games, Recreation League games or from basketball boosters club members. . . . it certainly pays to be an early bird on this one!

Preston Klein peers from a tunnel used at the CCC gymnastic classes. (Carol McCann)

☐ Its that time again . . . Girl Scout cookies are being sold in their annual door-to-door campaign. These sales are a big help to the Scouts, as they support troop activities as well as helping to pay for summer camp and Wider Opportunities. If one of the scouts has been unable to get to you with all of the snow, call Debbie Haase, who is Cookie Manager. The cost is $2 a box (one of the few things that haven't gone up since last year).

☐ Here's to a speedy recovery for Noel Ripley, who is out of commission with back problems . . .

☐ The Special Olympics Team of Cohasset returned winners!! Michael Goodhue won a ribbon for fifth place, while teammates Jay Nothnagle won the Bronze Medal and Peter Plante was awarded sixth place in all the 75 meter speed skating events. A grand time was had by all, the trip was a huge success. Great job by the first Special Winter Olympics Team.

☐ Ran into Mary Davis last week, who was positively bursting to tell me her latest news . . . a grandmother once again, this time Tom Davis did the honors by presenting her with a grandson, Gregory. Gregory is of Korean descent, and became a member of the family on Dec. 19. Mary has the cutest pictures, be sure to see them! Tom and his family are residents of Arnold, Maryland.

☐ That's the news from here . . . keep it coming!

Selectmen's briefs

Beer license granted

Selectmen unanimously granted the Cohasset Rotary Club a license to sell beer March 31. The local Rotarians will sell beer from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. at the Town Hall parking lot that day during the annual 10K Road Race by the Sea.

Insurance board vacancies

Selectmen are currently accepting applications for two vacancies on the Municipal Insurance Board.

At Monday night's meeting, selectmen voted to accept the resignation of insurance board member George McCullough.

Anyone interested in serving on the insurance board should contact Acting Executive Secretary Janet Chalke at the selectmen's office.

Ambulance fee policy

After receiving a complaint several weeks ago about an incorrect ambulance bill, selectmen asked Fire Chief Martin Dooley to find the origin of the policy which states that residents should not be billed for in-town ambulance service.

After searching through Fire Department records, and asking several longtime firefighters, Chief Dooley said there is apparently no written record which states a resident will not be billed for ambulance services within the town. Chief Dooley surmised that the former fire chief initiated the practice without a written statement. Chief Dooley recommended that the free in-town service remain in effect.

Selectmen agreed that ambulance transportation within the town will remain free of charge. Transportation to an out-of-town hospital or medical center will continue to cost $75. These policies will be written into the Fire Department's handbook of rules and regulations.

Two pass Captain's exam

Two Cohasset firefighters were informed this week that they passed the most recent Civil Service examination for the position of Fire Department Captain.

Paul Bilodeau, a four-year veteran of the department, scored 80 on the test. Robert Silvia, who has been in the department since 1977, scored 90. Chief Martin Dooley praised both men for obtaining such high scores on a "very difficult test."

This is the first time anyone within the department has scored above the passing mark in the Captain's exam since Chief Dooley was appointed two years ago. The Civil Service test has been administered four times since that time.

A score of 70 is considered passing. A total of seven Cohasset firefighters completed the most recent exam in November.

Civil Service notified the applicants of their scores this week. There will be a three-week waiting period so that all applicants may appeal their individual test scores. After that time, selectmen may request the list of all candidates who scored passing marks, and will make an appointment from that list.

Cohasset has had an acting captain within the department since August, 1982. Selectmen are expected to make a permanent appointment to the position as soon as possible.

Energy grants available

Selectman Rocco Laugelle noted that according to a recent edition of the Beacon, a monthly municipal newsletter, there is $1 million in state energy grants available to local cities and towns.

Laugelle said that town officials should contact school personnel and compose a list of items that could be included in an energy grant proposal. Storm doors and windows for the schools should be considered for submission in the town's proposal, he added.

Fire Chief Martin Dooley told selectmen the glass doors at the station need attention. He suggested that an application for state money should include appropriations requests for that.

Laugelle also noted that all the doors at Town Hall need replacement. According to the selectman, applications for the grant money should be submitted by the end of the month.

Applaud volunteers

To campaign and to be elected to a municipal board is noteworthy. There are few who take the time, accept the challenge and claim responsibility for their actions.

We must consider ourselves lucky to have anyone willing to run for elected office. It's a difficult decision and we are thankful for those who take up task.

But what about the numerous residents who are selected to participate in the various committees and boards in our town? We think they deserve special attention and appreciation.

They do not seek the limelight of a campaign spread across the media. In fact, they usually hate to see their name and statements in print. They want to quietly volunteer their precious and limited spare time to help the town in some capacity.

We have volunteers on the advisory committee - people with knowledge and expertise in the field of finance. They come home from work, and spend at least two entire evenings a week devouring municipal budgets. They stray away from politics, considering only the financial implications of their recommendations.

There are members of the cable advisory commitees, the zoning board of appeals, the government structure committee and the watershed protection committee. Too many groups and too many names to specify in one article. But to them and their seemingly infinite amount of energy and dedication to the town, we applaud you.

This week, the Town Hall Study Committee prepared a status report for selectmen. The membership decided that the historic Town Hall stage should be preserved, and they proposed an alternative for accommodating needed office space.

The chairman of the committee, a retired architect, has prepared detailed sketchings of the proposed addition to Town Hall. These will be presented to selectmen next week.

Here is a voluntary committee, selected by the Board of Selectmen, who met frequently and without fanfare. They completed their task and in a professional, orderly fashion, have developed a proposal which is likely to please just about everyone.

These are the people who work behind the scenes, without political intentions to guide them. They get the job done.

Our community would suffer without the dedication of so many people who care enough to contribute.

Meetings with Golden

State Sen. William Golden was hosted at a coffee of more than 50 people at the home of Helen Ireton of Hingham January 30.

Golden met with local leaders and residents to discuss what has been taking place on Beacon Hill since he became senator on January 2, and to answer questions that Hingham residents might have. He offered assistance should anyone need his staff regarding matters dealing with state government.

Golden will be meeting with local officials in all towns in his district — Weymouth, Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury.

He and his staff can be reached at 722-1646 in Room 416B at the State House.

Commend firefighters

Dear Chief Dooley,

On January 25, we called for the Fire Department's assistance in locating a possible electrical fire.

Capt. Gurry and Firefighter Silvia investigated the situation. They searched all possibilities in every room of our home. Fortunately, they found only a minor problem. We would like to commend these firefighters for their professional thoroughness in the investigation.

Very truly yours,
Bernard and Catherine Mulcahy

Gilbert Tower story

Letter to the Editor

I would like to compliment you upon the very excellent article which you wrote to appear in the Jan. 24 issue of the Mariner regarding Gilbert Tower. It was written with warmth and understanding and covered the many salient points which we discussed very completely.

A number of Cohasset residents have spoken to me favorably about the article.

Yours truly,
Arnold Weeks

Quick response

To the Cohasset Fire Department,

Now that I'm back among the living, I just want to thank the Fire Department as a whole for getting me to St. Mary's Hospital two weeks ago.

I really appreciate the care and concern that was shown to me. The firemen that helped me that morning did their job to the fullest and then some. The St. John family has always supported the Fire Department, but I think now we will be a little more vocal in our support.

Thanks again for everything,
Joan St. John
20 Stockbridge Street

Thanks to department

Dear Members of the Cohasset Fire Department,

I would like to express my thanks for your quick response and expert care the day of my accident (Nov.6). I am sure I would not have recovered so well if you had not been there when I needed you.

Sincerely,
Ruth Mitchell

Special Olympics

To the Editor:

Really want you to know how happy I was with your article on the Special Olympics. It was a wonderful story about so many special people.

Thank you so much for writing such a meaningful story - hopefully many people will become much more aware of and sensitive to those with special needs because of articles such as yours.

Thank you sincerely!

Mike Suhrbier rushes down the mountain in a practice run at Blue Hills.

Cohasset's Ski Team

This is the Cohasset Junior/Senior High School Ski Club. Formed just after Thanksgiving, these young team members have been practicing twice a week for the races held each week at Prospect Hill in Waltham.

The idea for a ski team was formulated when several students mentioned their interest in skiing to Athletic Director Clark Chatterton. He notified Robin Suhrbier and asked if she would coordinate a team. She accepted.

The 15-member team is largely inexperienced, she says, but they have a lot of enthusiasm. "They've learned a lot from this year's competition," she adds. "Most of the kids have never raced before."

They travel to and from Waltham after school each week. The team practices every Wednesday and Thursday at Blue Hills with coach Mark Anderson, in preparation for competition against high schools from Waltham, Xaverian, Newton South and Newton North, Brookline, Wellesley, Westwood, Milton and Needham.

Members Mike Suhrbier, Kurt Weisenfluh and Jim Dormer are competing very well this year. Credit goes to all the team members, Robin notes, most of whom never competed in a slalom race before they hit the slopes in November.

The season is scheduled to end Feb. 27. We wish this team continued good luck, for many seasons to come.

Donald Caffery prepares for take off to the top of the mountain.

A moment of rest for (l to r) David Caffery and Mark Brown as they ride to the top of the mountain.

Chuck Dole rushes past a gate on the Blue Hills slalom run.

Intramural volleyball for junior high school students will be starting Mondays through Thursdays from 2:10 to 2:45. Students wishing to play should pass a team of eight or nine players in to Ms. Watson. The tournament schedule will be posted in the upstairs gym and will start Monday, Feb. 11.

Reading aloud

As an outgrowth of the well-received Jim Trelease Program in November, the Cohasset Public Library has joined Deer Hill School in sponsoring a Reading Aloud activity for fourth through sixth grade students.

JoAnne Mitchell and Marilyn Pope, Children's librarians, have recruited nine volunteers who are "graduates" of the library's Pre-School Story Hour training to begin reading aloud to small groups or entire classes for approximately a half-hour every week.

Their selections, chosen by the librarians, include "Save Queen of Sheba," "Tuck Everlasting," "Snowbound," and "Superfudge." The program is not designed to supplement the curriculum, but to reinforce the idea that "books can bring joy."

Volunteers are Marie Buckley, Kate Caldwell, Nancy Connolly, Jane Goedecke, Linda Henderson, Lee Jenkins, Joan Kovach, Marsha Silvia, and Wezie Welz.

Valentine Cabaret

An intimate, candlelit cabaret will open for one night only, Thursday, Feb. 14, for lovers of romantic music.

Members of the senior chorus will transform the nigh school cafeteria with their music on the Valentine theme, from 8-9:30 p.m. Hors d'oeuvres will be served also.

Vocal music director and M.C. for the evening, Bryan Marks, promises a "really nice evening with a touch of class."

Reservations should be made early by calling the high school (383-6100)during the day or Linda O'Loughlin (383-9870) in the evening. Tickets are $5 per couple, $3 per person.

The evening's proceeds will go towards the Heritage Music Festival trip.

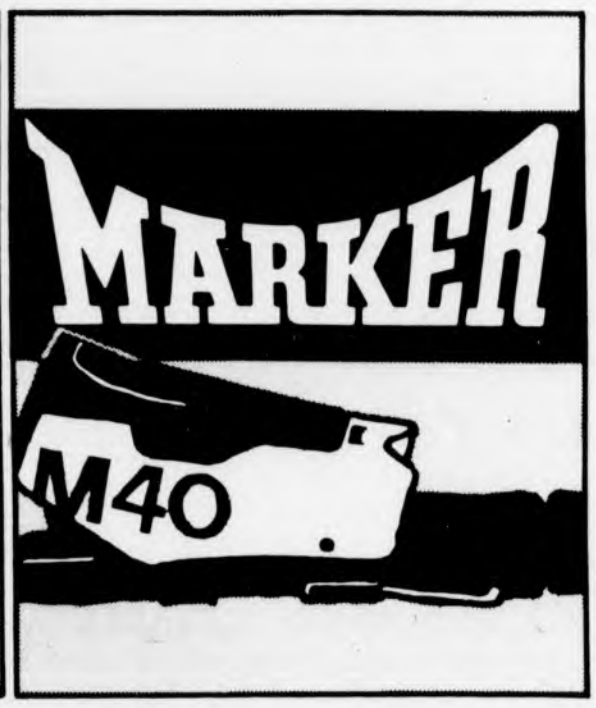
Special needs support group

Did you know that a Support Group for Parents of Children with Special Needs meets monthly? Our purpose is to exchange information about educational and recreational programs, and legislative changes, to provide emotional support. We usually meet on the first Tuesday morning of the month, although we also plan an evening meeting this spring. We welcome and encourage to join us any parent of a child receiving services in the Cohasset Schools under Chapter 766 (such as time in the resource room, work with a learning disabilities specialist, or programming in a moderate or severe special needs classroom), or any Cohasset parent whose child is served in a program in another town.



For more information, call: Wilma Goodhue, 659-7233; Taffy Nothnagle 383-0895; or Norma Grasse, PSO Special Needs chairman, 383-6857.

Transportation comm wants look at LRV

South Shore residents may soon get an opportunity to get a look at the light rail vehicle (LRV) that could offer at least part of a solution to the unremitting commuting problems of getting from here to Boston and back.

The Hingham transportation committee has asked Charles Stewart, director of construction for the MBTA, to demonstrate the so-called BRE-Leland, a unit very similar to the Budliner used north and west of Boston.

"It's not that we necessarily want to have it here in Hingham," committee chairman Caroline Stouffer explained this week. "But we happen to have some tracks, adjacent to the Station Street parking lot, that are in fairly good shape that would provide a place to see what this vehicle could do. You have to be practical. You don't want to get into a situation of having to go out and build a piece of track just to see what this thing can do."

Stouffer, who, when she was a state legislator from Hingham and Hull several years ago, was very active in lobbying for better South Shore transportation, including water access to Boston. "There are several possible routes that could be used. One would be down to Middleboro. Another could be the old Weymouth-Braintree tracks. Or there could be further access to the shipyard (where the state has built a large park-and-ride lot for the use of boat commuters).

"The important thing is to look at new transportation solutions and then incorporate them into a whole plan for the region," she added.

Stouffer said the BRE-Leland was demonstrated in Rhode Island about six months ago and she hopes South Shore residents will be able to take a look at it in the very near future.

The transportation dilemma on the South Shore has taken on a larger profile in state government circles, as former State Sen. Allan McKinnon, who was also active in transportation issues, is now an assistant secretary of transportation in the Dukakis administration with the task of improving transportation around the Route 128 area. And the question of whether full rail service, which would mean rebuilding the Neponset River bridge, will be decided in the near future.

'The hills are alive . . .'

Produced by David Lacatell and directed by James "Bud" Berlenbach, the Hingham Civic Music Theatre will be presenting the "Sound of Music " as its winter show.

It will be held Friday, Feb. 15 and Saturday, Feb. 16 at 8 p.m., Sunday, Feb. 17 at 2 p.m., and Friday, Feb. 22 and Saturday, Feb. 23 at 8 p.m. All performances will be held at the Hingham High School auditorium. Prices for tickets are: $4 for students and senior citizens, $5 for advance sales and $6 for all seats sold at the door. There will be no reserved seating for any performances.

Tickets may be purchased at the Hingham Library or the Hingham Square Bookshop or by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope and check to: HCMT, Box 50, Hingham, MA. 02043. Ticket inquiries may be made by calling 749-6998.

As in the past, the cast of the HCMT production is outstanding. Maria Raine will be played by Donna Milani Luther, remembered well for her portrayal of Nellie Forbush in South Pacific. Captain George Von Trapp will be played by Donald Capen, whose portrayal of Marrin' Sam in Li'l Abner delighted everyone who saw him. Other members of the cast will impress audiences by their outstanding quality of musical sound.

The chorus will once more be under the capable direction of Salvatore Bartolotti who is renowned for his ability to bring the best voices together. This will be another memorable evening of entertainment and one for which it will be wise to purchase tickets early.

Building#19 collects green for G.S.

The invitation, printed in Girl Scout green, bore a striking resemblance to those familiar advertising flyers you find stuffed inside your paper. And the copy on the flyer looked familiar, too: "Bring your spouse or friend (just one; not both—who needs trouble)" and "Don't wear your best clothes—after all...it is Bldg #19!"

And indeed it was Sunday night at the original Building #19 in Hingham with Jerry Ellis himself presiding as auctioneer for what was billed as a "Semi-Big-Time Auction and Fancy-Schmancy Party" to benefit the Patriots' Trail Girl Scout Council.

That council includes girls in 65 towns in and around Boston, including Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset. But this fundraiser was a little different than the usual cookie or calendar sale.

The appeal went out to businessmen, a move that other youth groups have begun to use as an effective tool as well. And rather than being a fundraiser for a troop or council's general fund, this event had a specific purpose—to renovate and upgrade the Girl Scout houses in several towns in the area, including Hingham, Weymouth, Milton, Randolph, Sharon, Walpole and Westwood, as well as some of the council's campsites.

And how could anyone resist the offer of a gift of $1,000 at the door, just for showing up (which explanation was expanded in the bottom corner of the invitation, NRC (Not Real Cash), otherwise known as Building #19 play money)? And it was used for the first part of the evening's activities, bidding on camp relics like a half a canoe paddle, battered cooking utensils and a broken ski. The message, though, was clear enough-there is a need to upgrade the council's campsites and equipment there.

Refreshments for the evening featured peanut butter and jelly sandwiches and that old camp favorite, "bug juice," together with Building #19 fortune cookies.

All this was a painless way for Ellis and his co-chairman, Eugene Roundtree of All-Stainless in Hingham, to introduce the council's $2.5 million Capital Campaign to South Shore businessmen—because, though those cookie sales are great, sometimes a larger boost all at once is needed.

This drive is the first of its kind in the 70-year history of Girl Scouting in Massachusetts, as was described in the brochure-promised "No longer than 15 minute 'Keep the Girl Scouts in the Green' corporate contribution pitch by the Patriots' Trail Council."

Who is this man and why is he saying these beat-up life preservers are "such a deal"? It was all part of the fun Sunday night as Building #19's Jerry Ellis (as above) was the auctioneer at the Patriot Trail Girl Scout Council's "Semi-Big-Time Auction and Fancy-Schmancy Party." (Quigley photo)

A talk with dramatic club director

By Helen Ketcham

"As a child, I cued my father in Morning's At Seven," Denny Ripley, director of Cohasset Dramatic Club's forthcoming production of Morning's At Seven, remembers. "It was in 1940, during a summer stock appearance and Dad played the part of Thor opposite Edith King."

Denny Ripley's father was, of course, matinee idol, Donald Brian.

Discovered by George M. Cohan, Donald Brian went on to make theatre history as the original Prince Danilo in The Merry Widow, and for more than forty years continued to enthrall audiences, coast to coast, in both his dramatic roles and in musical comedy.

Denny's mother, Virginia O'Brien (who lives with the Ripleys here in Cohasset), was a star in her own right. Upon graduation from the New England Conservatory and armed with a letter of introduction from the Dean, Virginia O'Brien journeyed to New York, where Donald Brian was producing a show.

Her talent quickly recognized, Virginia O'Brien (Brian) often graced both New York and Boston stages, retiring only when Denny was born. The Brians, then, established a School of Theatre in Great Neck, Long Island. It was there that young Denny Brian began her professional training.

Denny made her theatrical debut in Chicago, sharing the stage with her father in the show, Music in the Air. She was eight years old.

And then it began: radio, television, modelling for J. R. Powers, apprenticing in Woodstock (New York) until Denny arrived in Cohasset to join the South Shore Players. One of the most prestigious groups in the country, boasting America's biggest stars, the South Shore Players, using Cohasset's Town Hall stage, was an Equity company employing the 'Star System' and a resident company for whom Denny was to be the 'second woman'.

Donald Brian died before he could see his daughter on Cohasset's Town hall stage, where so often he himself had starred, his leading roles supported by such young hopefuls as, Humphrey Bogart and Broderick Crawford.

As a Player, Denny acted in, among other shows, The Heiress, with Walter Abel and Martha Sleeper, and won the leading ingenue part in The Two Mrs. Carrolls, featuring Sylvia Sidney. That summer, Denny met Sheldon Ripley, who was constructing sets for the company. Their "summer romance" has lasted 35 years.

Sheldon and Denise Ripley have been active members of the Cohasset Dramatic Club for almost thirty years. Asked to name the highlights of her long acting career with the Club, Denny cites, Remains to be Seen (her first show) and The Great Sebastions, both directed by Paul Blackmur. "And I loved doing the Judy Holiday part in Born Yesterday!"

The Gazebo won Denny Best Director award from the Club "and Mouse Trap," she recalls, "was a great success. Also, I enjoyed directing The Cat and the Canary, not a good script," she laughs, "but such fun to do."

"I have always wanted to do Morning's at Seven. I want to create the mood of family relationships, capture their natural humor, their tenderness, even intrude on their conflicts. Here, the families are close; have genuine affection for each other; feel a real concern. I want to show that older people still live interesting, active lives . . . " She continues: "It is a simple story, well-written—a microcosm of life, expressing a lovely feeling. In fact," she confesses with excitement, "every time I do a scene, I see something else, a new treasure that I want the cast to see, to feel and to give each other."

Denny feels that Morning's at Seven can be, in fact, a lesson for the audience."PaulOsborn isa very perceptive playwright. His work is timeless. And . . . the lines flow so well . . .

"I amdelighted with the cast.There is no star,no lead: all parts are good, interesting. And, of course," she adds with a smile in her voice, "Sheldon has done a lovely set. It's up now and will be painted next week."

Denny Ripley sighs: "If it all comes together, we will have a gem. Truly, a gem."

Morning's at Seven, by Paul Osborn, will be presented at the Cohasset Town Hall March 1 (Friday) at 8 p.m.; March 2 (Saturday) 8 p.m.; and March 3 (Sunday) 2 p.m.

Thursday, Feb. 28 (Dress Rehearsal) the Club invites the Senior Citizens as its guests, Town Hall, 8 p.m.

Advanced tickets sales at Fleming's . . . or . . . may be purchased at door at performance time, ticket price $4.

Sunday - January Twentieth

By Jennifer Plante

Every year at the very same time
We settle our attention to the 50-yard line.
By the time our day is nearly done,
They're just beginning 'neath the California sun.

With pads and helmets — cleats and all —
Did San Francisco win the toss for the ball?
Well, on with this poem I am going to write
About a thrilling event on a cold winter's night.

Mom has the snacks for all to share,
While Dad settles down in his reclining chair.
Up goes the football between the goal.
There goes Dad, he's out of control.

With rushing, punting, kicking and all
We can hardly keep up with the fast-moving ball.
An extravagant sight is the half-time scene —
We celebrate the glory of SUPER BOWL
NINETEEN.

A Day In the Life. . .

By Michael Cisneros

The counselor's meeting back on Algonkin Island late that night was a spirited affair. With the exception of P., all the counselors were in a state of rage brought on by an extensive two-hour wild goose chase.

"Tomorrow," roared C., "Miller dies! I don't care about my job! He dies!"

P. laughed in his face. "Don't be ridiculous. Miller didn't throw you in the lake. You fell in — you and F. and R. and J."

"That's enough out of you," snapped F. "Why didn't you tell us you were just outside the rec hall with Miller and Webster?"

"A millimeter to the left," retorted P., "and you would have tripped over us. Why didn't you look?"

"It was dark," lamented R. "and nobody told me there was a lake."

"That's why it's called Silver Lake," explained P. patiently. "They've got a lake — a silver one."

"Wait till D. gets back tomorrow," said J. "He wasn't too happy that a skunk sprayed him and we left him behind. He has no change of clothes."

"Please, no more!" ranted P. hysterically.

"I ran into a bear!" said B. "If I hadn't kicked it and scared it. . ."

"You! Was that you?" said L. "that was me! I'm not a bear!"

"Then why did you grab me?"

"I thought you were Miller!"

"I'm gonna write a book about this!" shouted P. "It. . ."

"M.! Suppertime."

"Coming, Ma," I said. I put my book away and went downstairs to eat.

Cohasset Drinking Water

By Josh Stevenson

An amoeba named Max and his brother,
Were having a drink with each other.
They laughed and got drunk,
Their breath really stunk,
Then Max floated out like a Carruther.

Later that week Max met his brother.
They had a long talk with each other.
Amidst their quaffing,
They had split their sides laughing,
And now each one was a mother.

Soon this became a bad habit.
They multiplied just like a rabbit.
They started at four,
Then became more and more.
They reside in Pond Lily, Cohasset.

The Person I Most Admire

By Kristin Martin

As I sat on my bed Thursday night, I was thinking, "What in the world does Mrs. Cisneros mean by — write about a person you admire?" Who could I write about? Mayor Ray Flynn, George Washington, Pope John Paul II? Although I admire these three people I really don't know any of them except for their position in life. After dinner I thought about it some more and then it struck me. "Why don't I write about someone I know!"

Someone I know who has done something really courageous in life is a friend of mine — Jay Nothnagle. Not only is he a great kid but he also has Downs Syndrome. Downs Syndrome is a type of mental retardation which affects the mind and body. It makes Jay smaller than other people his age and gives him a lower I.Q. Although Jay only looks seven, he is really 11 years-old.

I remember one night on New Year's Eve, his family and mine went to Edaville Railroad. We played games, laughed, and had a really great time. Jay loves to be teased and tickled.

One of the things I admire about Jay is that he likes to be in contests like other kids. As a matter of fact, Jay participated in the Special Olympics this weekend and got third place in speed skating. He got a Bronze Metal. Jay competed with kids eight to 15 and he was only beaten by two 15 year-olds.

Even though Jay has Downs Syndrome, he is still treated like any other member of his family. He goes to Osgood School, rides the school bus, and even goes to some of the classes with the third graders. He plays street hockey with his brother, David, and is a Cub Scout, too.

Jay may not become mayor of Boston or president of the United States, but he works twice as hard as anyone else to make it in life. It is for this reason I admire him.

Cub Scout Troop 38 activities

By Maria Buckley

January proved to be a very busy month for the Cub Scouts of Troop #38 as they eagerly worked on their achievements for their next badges.

NEWS FROM THE DENS

Den 1: The Cubs were very excited about this month's project which involved their putting together individual crystal radio sets. They worked enthusiastically and enjoyed taking home their own completed "awesome" radio!

Den 2: Physical fitness and related skills were the focus of this month's activities. The Cubs participated in races and two-man contests to earn their Building Muscles achievements.

Another meeting was devoted to knot-tying. The boys practiced tying various kinds of knots and learned how and when each knot should be used.

The weather was perfect for ice skating on the duck pond, and the scouts demonstrated their ability to skate in circles, stop short and skate backward.

Thanks to the Cohasset policemen and the Cohasset firemen, Den 2 enjoyed a very interesting tour of their facilities. This tour will help the Cubs in working toward their law enforcement achievement.

Den 3: Mrs. Theriault presented a very educational and important talk about First Aid. The Cubs then put together individual First Aid kits. The kits were made from empty metal band-aid boxes into which they packed sample size first aid equipment. The boxes were designed for the glove compartment of the family car.

Creating individual terrariums was the focus of another den meeting. Using empty plastic coke bottles and various house plants, the Cubs were able to create some interesting and live centerpieces.

An ice fishing trip to Duxbury with the Dads was an enjoyable outing. The Cubs eagerly built their fire on the ice and tried their luck. Too much competition from the surrounding "old pros," however, seemed to prevent them from being successful.

Congratulations to Scott Theriault, Jay Nothnagle and Jason Porter. Scott has earned his Wolf and Jay and Jason have each earned one bead which means that they have completed one-fourth of their achievements on the way to becoming Wolves.

Den 4: Bobby Gentile, Grant Jancsics, Jon Ford, Gerht Lubitz, Stephen Mulcahy and Michael Riley all received their Bobcat badges in December. The boys were also delighted when they were awarded the much coveted Silver Eagle Award for being best den at the December inspection.

This month the boys spent one meeting touring the Cohasset Water Treatment plant. Thanks to tour guide Denise, the boys learned the workings of the plant and how our water is cleaned before it reaches our homes for use. After the tour, the Cubs lowered the Water Dept. flag at dusk, and refreshments followed at Gentille's.

Another meeting was highlighted by Jeff Forsdick, Cubmaster and carpenter, and Tim Jancsics, Grant's older brother and a carpenter, who assisted the boys in making their own sets of stilts. Sanding, drilling, screwing, hammering and gluing were all the skills involved and necessary to see this project to its completion. Trying out the stilts on an icy driveway provided an interesting test of prowess!

Congratulations to Stephen Mulcahy and Michael Riley who have both earned their Wolf Badges! All other members of this den have earned at least one bead so they're on their way to becoming Wolves!

Den 5: The boys busied themselves at one meeting creating various unusual and colorful potato prints.

Another meeting was spent organizing and starting their collection projects. Assembling and labeling collections is a necessary project requirement for one of the Wolf achievements.

Advancement awards this month are: Brian Duffy, Earl Bestick and John McDonald who have earned their Bobcats and Christopher Goodman who has earned his Wolf Badge. Congratulations, boys!

Webelos: The Webelos have completed working on their most difficult badge. This is the Citizenship badge. Good work, boys!

Their latest project is building a portable picnic table with their leader Mr. Merle Brown. It will seat four boys and will be very useful when they go camping with Troop #28 Boy Scouts.

Cohasset Travel(s) to new site

There's a change about to be made within the Cushing Plaza.

The familiar yellow awning above Cohasset Travel Service will soon be moving to shade a new storefront.

The four-year old travel agency will be relocating its offices to the former Landry's Book Parlour site at Cushing Plaza. Now located at the rear of the plaza, this new site will provide the expanding company with additional needed floor space.

Co-owners June Lowe and Uta Williams explained that the move was necessitated by an expanding business and staff. What began as a two-person venture four and a half years ago, now provides a professional staff of six.

"We also needed the 500 additional square feet to accommodate our computer system. We have used this computer for three years now. At a touch we can have instant information about the best fares, the available tickets, and the weather at your destination," owner June Lowe explained.

The services have expanded through the years, Uta noted, and the staff has grown in proportion to the number of clients.

"We give excellent service," she added. "We spend a lot of time with all our customers. Our staff, which is largely European, is experienced and knowledgeable."

The new location will also provide the growing business with a private office, a necessity, June explained, for providing customers with more personal, confidential attention.

Cohasset Travel Service is open for business in Cushing Plaza from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays, and 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturdays.

Geriatric counseling service

The Social Service League of Cohasset has been notified by South Shore Elder Services, Inc., that it has been awarded a grant funded by Federal monies available under Title III B of the Older American Act.

South Shore Elder Services is a private, non-profit organization designated by the Executive Office of Elder Affairs to plan and coordinate the needs of the elderly in eleven South Shore Towns.

The grant will allow the Social Service League to continue its Geriatric Counseling service for the fifth year. The service offers mental health and other counseling services to elders and their relatives in Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell and Scituate.

Social workers at the League, Carolyn Housman, M.S.W., and Judy Basmajian, M.S.W., provide support, information and guidance in response to social, health and emotional needs of elders. Most of the counseling is conducted in the home environment.

Additional elders are served through community education programs and support groups. The social workers have presented in-service training programs at other agencies.

The Social Service League has contributed a major portion of the funding for the Geriatric Counseling Service since the project began. Anyone interested in obtaining help or information should call the League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

South Shore Elder Services is a private, non-profit, social service agency serving Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Holbrook, Hull, Norwell, Milton, Quincy, Randolph, Scituate and Weymouth by providing services to persons 60 years old and older, enabling them to remain independent in their own homes and communities with dignity and comfort.

The Nutrition Program serves a thousand meals a day, Monday through Friday, and makes very special efforts to reach those who are not eating well because of such problems as lack of skills in selecting and preparing meals; lack of mobility in shopping and cooking; feelings of loneliness; or lack of finances.

A voluntary donation of 75 cents is asked for each meal but no one is turned away because of inability to pay, and there is no minimum income necessary to participate.

The backbone of the Program are the volunteers who serve in a variety of ways: operating the meal sites, serving and delivering meals and planning social activities are just a few. Their dedication - their caring - and their zest for life - are their invaluable contribution.

In appreciation for the myriad of services which they so unselfishly perform, special Volunteer Recognition Luncheons will be held at the Catherine McGowan Senior Center, 27 Brook St., Scituate, Tel. 545-5885, between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m.

For more information call Phyllis Dane, Volunteer Coordinator at 383-9790.

'Thank you' lunch

Under the auspices of South Shore Elder Services, Inc. a series of "Thank You" lunches will be held the week of Feb. 11 through Feb. 15, honoring 450 dedicated men and women who daily volunteer their services in serving or delivering meals to the elderly.

THE PRODIGAL
A Film For and About the Family

On January 14 the preview showing of the Prodigal (a production of Billy Graham's World Wide Pictures) was seen by over a hundred people from the greater Plymouth area. Their enthusiastic response was overwhelming. Here's what they said about the movie:

"I definitely see great potential for the use of 'The Prodigal.' I hope that my parents see the film. It helps explain and depict the types of struggles that youth fight. Particularly the struggle to find the true meaning of God in their own way."

Teenager/Marshfield

"A beautiful portrayal of the complexities of life today and the need people feel to find meaning in their lives."

C.E. Director/Hanover

"Very inspiring and yet so down to earth. Easily understood...anyone who is searching should see it and get the beautiful message."

Young Woman/Kingston

"A very good flick!!! I recommend it for those of all ages, especially teenagers!"

Youth Worker/Plymouth

"Very professional, humorous—it brought tears to my eyes and joy to my heart."

Student/Duxbury

"I feel very lucky to have seen this film. It has cleared up some questions I have had, in an indirect way. I do hope many more people have a chance to view this movie."

Fight for sewer funding . . .

that even though 12 towns - - Amesbury, Bourne, Bridgewater, Granby, Groton, Seekonk, Shirley, Southampton, Southwick, Swansea, Weston, and Wilbraham - - have been placed on the extended position of the state's priority list for funding of community septic systems, which in most cases include small diameter alternative collector sewers, and that even though nine towns - - Brookfield, Fairhaven, Holliston, Lunenburg, Mattapoisett, Norfolk, Royalston, Shrewsbury, and Wellfleet - - have been placed on the extended position of the priority list for funding of on-site repairs, DWPC has no intention, and never had any intention, of ever funding the construction of these projects. This position is directly contrary to previous DWPC representation, the Federal Clean Water Act, EPA regulations and DWPC's agreement with the EPA delegating DWPC authority to implement the construction grant program - - to say nothing of state law and the prudent administration of public funds.

"The impact of DWPC's totally irresponsible position on our towns will be disastrous. It will prevent us from getting the assistance Congress intended to give us to solve our wastewater problems with appropriate environmental superior technology we can afford. Instead, we will only be able to get assistance if we agree to build a large, conventional sewer plant, which we can't afford - - in Cohasset's case, DWPC insisted on funding a $15-$30 million plan serving 30-60 percent of our town, but won't fund appropriate technology serving the entire town for $8 million. Thus, communities like ours are being forced to choose between not solving our wastewater problems, and building plants we can't afford."

DeSantis continued, " DWPC's position constitutes a callous disregard of our needs, Congress' wishes and the hard work, time, and money we have expended on the planning process. It means that the money we have expended for planning and design was obtained and expended on the basis of false or misleading representation from state officials.

"There is much at stake in this matter for all of us. We urge you to contact your State Representative, your State Senator, your Congressman and our U.S. Senators immediately and urge them to stop this bureaucratic disregard of sound legislative, fiscal, and environmental policy before it is too late."

In the meantime, according to Commissioner Guild, the town is still awaiting EPA's decision whether to overturn DWPC's refusal to fund Cohasset's alternative collector system. Although a target date of February 15 was specified, Guild said there have been indications a decision will not be finalized at that time.

Guild added, "our expectations are that this group of towns may feel they have been misled, and will certainly appeal this to the federal government. The state has expended state money and misled the towns into spending their own money for the design of these systems they will never fund and never had any intention of funding. That is a misuse of public funds."

Skiing on the South Shore

by Jane Tamburi Spitz

If your idea of a day of skiing includes hours of driving, long waits on chair lift lines, and agonizing over whether or not to make that move up to the more difficult slopes, then you haven't experienced South Shore cross-country skiing.

In addition to the inconveniences, the rising costs of alpine skiing in recent years has given both experienced and novice skiers the motivation to explore the sport in a different style.

You can get in your car, ski and be on your way home in the time it takes to reach many ski resorts in New Hampshire, explained Chuck Heyde, the ski department manager of Hanover's Carroll Reed Shop. "Cross-country skiing really can be a spur of the moment type of sport."

The diversity of terrain and the degree of challenge available to cross-country skiers are as varied as nature itself.

The many miles of trails on the South Shore offer scenic views, solitude and athletic diversion.

Before practicing your skill, imagination and endurance on the trails, it is important to dress properly, said Penny Donald, the assistant manager at the Ski Market in Braintree's Four Corners. "The key to being warm and comfortable while cross-country skiing is wearing a lot of thin layers."

Unlike down, that absorbs moisture thereby losing its warming quality, silk, wool, and polypropylene are efficient isulators. Donald recommends the layer closest to your body be made of polypropylene, which wicks moisture away from your skin and continues to insulate.

Unfortunately, the availability of instruction in cross-country skiing is minimal in this area. Novices may be attracted to alpine ski centers, many of which maintain cross-country trails and offer lessons.

James Fitzgerald, an instructor in both cross-country and alpine ski techniques at the Blue Hills Ski School in Milton, provides lessons at $20 per hour for students from five years old and up. He suggests that beginners take one lesson and then go out on their own. Further instruction can improve technique, but it's that initial guidance that can make a world of difference, he said.

"At first, it's like learning to walk. Then you try to take longer and longer strides till you're sailing along. It can be as strenuous as you want it to be." Fitzgerald strongly advocates stretching exercises that work leg and torso muscles for all skiers before hitting the trails.

To ensure that equipment is properly fitted, he advises skiers to rent gear from a reputable shop. Skiis, poles, boots and bindings run about nine or ten dollars per day plus refundable deposit of $75 to $100 dollars depending on the shop. The cost for buying gear ranges from $110 to $250 or more.

Some of the most popular spots to experience the exhilaration of cross-country skiiing are Wampatuck State Park and World's End, both in Hingham, Norwell's Albert F. Norris Reservation, and Whitney and Thayer Woods in Cohasset. These locations offer the freedom of natural snow skiing and allow you to advance at your own pace.

At 68, Dr. Friedman can't call it quits

By Milly Potter

As long ago as when he was a kindergarten pupil in Austria, Dr. A. Frederick Friedman told his mother he wanted to be a doctor. There were no medical role models in his family; he thinks their family doctor — "a very nice man — influenced me."

Now, as he winds up his affairs at the South Shore Medical Center, which he founded with four other doctors in 1962, he's finding "it's harder than I thought it would be" to quit his medical practice.

But, as he points out, he's 68 years-old and is working 60 hours a week. He tried reducing his hours last year, but it was impossible. "You can't cut down in my type of work. It's all or nothing; you either do it or not."

The hours, the mountains of paperwork, and pressure from his wife and two children combined in his decision to retire.

Dr. Friedman has actually been practicing on the South Shore for 30 years, and the story of his arrival here is almost like a "book I might sit down and write one day," he acknowledges smilingly.

He began his medical studies in Vienna but they were interrupted when Hitler's forces invaded Austria. He made his way to France, where he enlisted in the French Army in 1940.

Shortly afterwards, while fighting, he was captured, and spent the next five years as a prisoner of war in Germany.

In March of 1945 his East Prussian POW camp was liberated by the Russian Army. The American forces took over three months later, and Dr. Friedman went back to France where he was demobilized.

For the next two and a half years he worked with the American Relief Organization in Paris, and it was there that he met his wife, Ida, a co-worker, who had come over from New Jersey.

But he still wanted to finish his medical education, and that was impossible in Europe at the time. He applied to the University of Vermont Medical School, was accepted, "and that's where we went."

He did his internship at Brighton, Marine Hospital, spending two years there. A couple of nurses who hailed from the South Shore told him doctors were needed in Rockland. So he settled there

S.S. Transportation Conundrum

By David A. Mittell, Jr.

Berkshire County has higher hills, Franklin County has more bears and Princess Anne occasionally visits the North Shore on account of their fine jumping ponies. But there is something special about the South Shore. Its combination of coastal beauty, historic architecture, well-run towns and upstanding population make it precious in the lives of its inhabitants. The South Shore, in short, is an extraordinary place.

There is, however, one aspect of the South Shore that touches us all that is extraordinary only in its abomination: our transportation system. Already bad 25 years ago, our transportation has continued to worsen as in the last quarter century the South Shore and Cape Cod have been the fastest growing part of Massachusetts.

As the problem worsened it became one of those things in life that we grumble chronically but impotently about: transportation became a political version of the Red Sox. It is said that the then Gov. Peabody was defeated for reelection in 1964 primarily because Cape traffic on the not-yet-completed Rte. 3 was such an awful mess that summer. So we grumbled and sometimes voted to "fire the manager," but neither our political leaders nor we who make or break them (as we drive the Expressway) were able to do much about the problem.

Of late, however, momentum seems to have been building to tackle the transportation problem at long last. Business leaders, political leaders, and plain old commuters have been speaking with one acerbic voice: "It's time to do something," they say. . .and indeed it is.

The problem now is that the monster problem that was at minimum 47 years (or since 1938) in the making will take years, multi-millions of dollars, and a correct plan to even begin to resolve. In this and following pieces I would like to raise some of the issues and difficulties that will lie ahead if (and it's a big if) the South Shore is able to speak with sufficient unity and acerbity to get the attention of the state and federal governments.

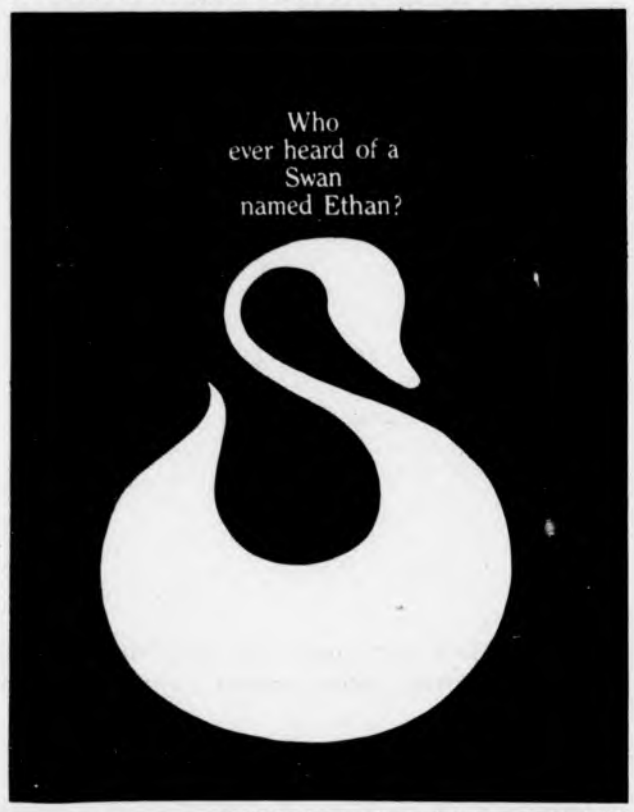
First a little history is in order, for it is history that gave us a bad road (Rte. 3), and it is history that deprived us altogether of the second and only other manner of getting great numbers of people to and from Boston every day — the railroad.

The history of the bad road is relatively simple. Rte. 3 was rebuilt (it had previously followed what now is Rte. 53) between 1954 and 1964 to the specifications of the McGuire Report — a 1948 document. Thus outdated at its inception, Rt. 3 became hopelessly overburdened when in the '60s and '70s the South Shore — in large part because of Rte. 3 — grew as never before in its long, proud history.

Bad as Rte. 3 has become, it nevertheless remains a better road than Rte. 1 north of Boston and Rte. 2 northwest of Boston, the latter of which retains Rte. 53-like, Depression-era dimensions for long stretches. Yet today the Beverly-to-Boston and the Concord-to-Boston commutes are significantly easier that the equidistant Marshfield-to-Boston commute. The plain and simple difference: the North Shore and the northwest suburbs have an excellent commuter rail system.

The loss of rail passenger service to the region is a longer tale, but one worth repeating, for its loss was the crucial mistake that locked us into our present predicament by forcing Rte. 3 to assume virtually the entire burden of commutation between Boston, the South Shore and Cape Cod.

Few today are aware that until 1938 there were regular passenger trains to nearly every town southeast of Boston. There was an Old Colony branch right down the South Shore from Braintree through Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury and Kingston into Plymouth. There was a main line to Plymouth through Whitman, Hanson, Halifax and Kingston. There was a spur into Whitman and another through Rockland into Hanover. There was another main line through Brockton, Middleboro and onto Wood's Hole and Provincetown; and another through Randolph and Stoughton and onto New Bedford and Fall River. There was even a line from Plymouth through Carver to Middleboro that could carry through passengers onto New York.



These lines, like all American railroads, were built on speculation, i.e. on the assumption that traffic would eventually increase enough to generate an operating profit. In some cases that never happened, and the Depression crippled many lines that had been profitable for a while. In 1938, therefore, the first abandonments took place: between Greenbush (Scituate) and Kingston, between Plymouth and Middleboro and in Hanover. Those abandonments were the fateful beginning of the end of passenger rail service on the South Shore.

The actual end came 21 years later, on June 30, 1959. At that juncture the new Rte. 3 was open as far as Hingham, was planned or under construction to the south and was handling its traffic well enough to draw the rational commuter away from a deteriorated Old Colony Railroad.

The Old Colony, long since absorbed by the New Haven Railroad, was a money-loser for the New Haven — a big money-loser itself. For one year in 1958-1959 the Commonwealth subsidized what service remained. Then on June 30, 1959, the subsidy expired, was not renewed and service died.

Many saw what was happening: from Quincy to the Canal and beyond an entire region of the state, including its main summer tourist attraction, would have to depend on a new but underdesigned Rte. 3. Immediately there were calls for the restoration of rail service, calls which have continued and continue to be unanswered to this very day.

(Next week we will see how the construction of the Red Line through Quincy and Braintree obliterated the South Shore's only rail connection with Boston.)

Beacon Hill Roll Call

"Beacon Hill Roll Call" records local representatives' votes on 10 more roll calls on proposed rules changes in the House. The Senate has already completed action on both Senate rules and joint House-Senate rules. The House has completed action on House rules only and is expected to take up proposed joint rules shortly.

A "Yea" vote is for the package, a "Nay" vote is against it.

Personnel Committee (H 1000) - House 114-32, rejected an amendment providing for secret ballot election by the respective caucus of the members of the new Committee on Personnel and Administration. The committee's duties include allocation of office space and staff to members. Amendment supporters said this system would create a democratic process and a committee free of pressure from the Speaker. Opponents said a better system is ratification by members of the Speaker and Minority Leader's appointments. They claimed an election would create an unwanted popularity contest.

Voting "Yea" was Reps. Charles Mann and Mary Jeannette Murray. Voting "Nay" were Reps. Robert Ambler, Suzanne Bump, Robert Cerasoli, William Flynn and Frank Hynes.

Veto Session (H 1000) - House 112-35, rejected an amendment allowing 25 percent, instead of 40 percent of the House members, to force the House back into session to vote on a gubernatorial veto. Amendment supporters said the 25 percent requirement is sufficient to require action on a bill the House has already passed. Opponents said 25 percent is too low and gives a small minority too much power.

Voting "Yea" were Reps. Mann and Murray. Voting "Nay" were Reps. Ambler, Bump, Cerasoli, Flynn and Hynes.

Steering Committee (H 1000) - House 115-30, rejected a lengthy amendment including provisions for a 15 member majority party Steering and Policy Committee which, along with any majority member, could nominate candidates for committee chairs to be elected by the majority party. Amendment supporters argued this would reduce the power of the Speaker and make the system more open. Opponents said nominations by the Speaker and written ballot ratification by majority party members is a better system and said the amendment would create a confusing and unfair popularity contest.

Voting "Yea" were Reps. Mann and Murray. Voting "Nay" were Reps. Ambler, Bump, Cerasoli, Flynn and Hynes.

Length of Service (H 1000) - House 114-28, rejected an amendment limiting a member to a single two year term on the Personnel and Administration Committee every eight years. Amendment supporters said this committee, with its powers to allocate office space and staff, is going to become very powerful, and claimed members should not be allowed to continously serve on it and build a power base and kingdom. Opponents said prohibitions and limits on committee service set a bad precedent and defeat any chance of continuity.

Rep. Ambler did not vote on the bill. Voting "Yea;' was Rep. Murray. Reps. Bump, Cerasoli, Flynn, Hynes and Mann cast "Nay" votes.

Chair's Salaries (H 1000) - House 117-26, upheld the ruling of the chair that an amendment prohibiting chairs from receiving a salary in excess of that paid rank and file members, was out of order and should not be allowed on the House floor. Supporters of the ruling said the order attempts to change a state law and must be filed as a separate bill. Opponents said the order is proper and claimed if the House can create new committees, it can also limit the salary of committee chairs.

Rep. Flynn did not vote. Voting "Yea" were Reps. Ambler, Bump, Cerasoli, Hynes and Murray. Voting "Nay" was Rep. Mann.

End Debate (H 1000) - Shortly after 11 a.m., the House 96-33 approved an order to end debate on the proposed rules package at 3 p.m. Supporters said several days of debate was sufficient and noted a small minority is simply delaying action by proposing repetitive amendments which have already been defeated. Opponents said the move was undemocratic and was simply an attempt to silence and crush the minority. (A "Yea" vote is for ending debate at 3 p.m. A "Nay vote is against ending debate).

Reps. Ambler and Flynn did not vote. Voting "Yea" were Reps. Bump, Cerasoli and Hynes. Voting "Nay" were Reps. Mann and Murray.

Budget Amendemnt (H 1000) - House 97-38, rejected an amendment eliminating a proposed rule requiring state budget amendments, filed by members for consideration during initial consideration of the bill, to be filed with the House Clerk 48 hours before debate on the bill begins. The proposed rule does not apply to budget amendments proposed during final consideration of the package. Amendment supporters said the 48 hour rule is undemocratic and stops members from offering amendments as debate goes along. Opponents said members should have two days to study amendments and noted they can still offer amendments from the floor during final consideration. (A "Yea" vote is against requiring 48 hour notice. A "Nay" vote is for requiring 48 hour notice).

Voting "Yea" were Reps. Mann and Murray. Reps. Ambler, Bump, Cerasoli, Flynn and Hynes voted "Nay".

Senate Amendments (H 1000) - House 92-42, rejected an amendment providing that traditional courtesy between the House and Senate, shall not be extended when the Senate attaches an amendment which is not germaine to the subject of a proposed bill. Amendment supporters said this will stop the Senate from its past practice of attaching controversial, unrelated amendments to existing bills. Opponents agreed the abuse exists, but said there were better ways to curb the abuse than declaring war on the Senate and straining the relationship with the upper branch.

Voting "Yea" were Reps. Mann and Murray. Voting "Nay" were Reps. Ambler, Bump, Cerasoli, Flynn and Hynes.

(H 1000) - House 112-27, rejected an amendment prohibiting House members from accepting political donations in excess of $2000 annually from lobbyists or political action committees. Amendment supporters argued the amendment would help curb the power of PACs and is a step toward limiting PAC contributions for all candidates. Opponents, many of whom favored limiting PAC contributions to all candidates, said it is unfair to only limit contributions to incumbents. They said a bill filed for 1985 would limit all PAC contributions.

Rep. Murray voted "Yea". Voting "Nay" were Reps. Ambler, Bump, Cerasoli, Flynn, Hynes and Mann.

Revenue Estimates (H 1000) - House 105-40, rejected an amendment requiring any motions, relating to the intent of the House concerning the distribution of local aid to cities and towns, to include revenue estimates and projections. Amendment supporters said resolutions "promising" certain amounts of aid should be backed up by revenue figures. Opponents said the amendment is too restrictive and argues the existence or lack of figures should be part of the debate when a specific resolution is proposed.

Voting "Yea" were Reps. Ambler, Bump, Mann and Murray. Voting "Nay" were Reps. Cerasoli, Flynn and Hynes.

Reading with a legal twist...

By Peggy Beals

"If there were no bad people there would be no good lawyers."

—Charles Dickens

Or famous lawyers. One of the famous, or infamous depending on who's talking, is Alan M. Dershowitz. Juvenile troublemaker, he was at 28 the youngest person to become a full professor at Harvard. Said a reporter, "When F. Lee Bailey needs a lawyer, he calls Alan M. Dershowitz." So do others, especially the desperate.

In The Best Defense, a 1982 book, Dershowitz describes several of his cases, nothing new in the bookworld, but few speak out with the bluntness of this author as he speaks of lawyers and courtroom procedures.

Interesting cases: can a man be punished for shooting a corpse? Why would a lawyer be willing to defend "the meanest man in New York" (Rabbi Bernard Bergman, alleged to run inhumane nursing homes)? Can two brothers be sentenced to die for a killing done by their father? He tells the curious twists of law allowing Memphis to go after the other star of 'Deep Throat', Harry Reems. His eye for the comic finds rich material in the ludicrous attempts of Truro to end nudity on its beaches.

The writing is easy to read, although full of legal jargon. I bogged down occasionally. Why he took cases is enlightening. His descriptions of the less than ideal behavior of those in authority are chilling, enough to scare you into behaving, or into copious prayer if you go get involved.

Brothers In Law

Law is almost as popular as medicine as book material. Louis Nizer's My Life In Court and The Jury Returns are still popular. He's a good writer and respected lawyer, fatherly rather than flamboyant.

F. Lee Bailey's The Defense Never Rests is more exciting. He too takes on the livelier cases. This best-seller was reviewed as "splendid, blunt, fascinating, highly, solidly engrossing." Bailey, like Dershowitz seems to fear no man. A later book tells of his run-in with California justice, and he's written a book of advice for young lawyers, of what isn't taught in school.

Gideon's Trumpet by Anthony Lewis is a heartening account of a convict in a Florida prison who studied, prepared and presented a petition to the U.S. Supreme Court. It was handwritten in pencil on paper issued by the prison for correspondence. One would imagine the mail room would toss it out but the court has set procedures, enabling those who cannot afford the usual route to get its ear. A 1964 book.

Fictional Lawyers

Plenty to choose from. In Ashworth & Palmer by Hauser, a young lawyer is accepted by a big corporate law firm, and rapidly disgusted by what goes on there. The famous case of Jarndyce vs. Jarndyce was Charles Dickens's setting for blowing off frustration when he tangled with the courts. Bleakhouse is the book, telling how the case went on for generations, resulting eventually in a verdict, but the money benefitted no one but the lawyers.

FROM THE BOOKSHELF

The Rt. Honourable The Earl of Birkenhead, P.C., D.L., D.C.L., L.L.D., High Steward of Oxford University, Fellow of Wadham and Merton Colleges, overcame all that to give us his Famous Trials of History. In sparse factual manner, he tells of the trial of Mary Queen of Scots, Capt. Kidd, Deacon Brodie, of Crippen's mistress Ethel le Neve and others.

By contrast, the blessed Rumpole runs the gamut of emotions, generously fueled by Pommerroy's plomk. Many enjoy him on Channel 2's mystery series. The books by John Mortimer are equally entertaining. They were not written, as I believe the feeble book 'Upstairs, Downstairs' was after the shows to wring a few more coins from trusting fans. Rumpole's Defense, The Return of Rumpole, etc. are in paperback. They are short stories, delightful reading.

Britishers Bewigged

The British legal system is different, boasting solicitors who do groundwork law, and barristers who go to court in wigs. The wigs have been made since 1689 by Ede & Ravenscroft of 93 & 94 Chauncy Lane, London, by appointment robe makers to H.M. Queen Elizabeth II. This and so much more fascinating reading available in Murder Ink, by Dilys Winn, which also includes a list of fictional lawyers and a commentary on which to choose to handle your case. See the books of Michael Gilbert, Sara Woods, Lesley Egan, Erle Stanely Gardner, Anthony Gilbert. In Murderess Ink, notes a numbers a number of criminal offenses in famous literature, finding in Snow White some criminal solicitation, fraudulent accosting, attempt to murder, reckless endangerment and more. Juicy stuff here.

If you've found other books with a legal angle you'd recommend, please write and share titles and authors.

Speaking of Books

The Marshfield YWCA is planning a book discussion group. You do not have to read a book to discuss. Meetings will feature a speaker enthusiastic about some aspect of reading, and general discussion of things members have enjoyed.

The Scituate Public Library is offering a series of book lectures.

Ventress Library in Marshfield is planning a Monday evening book discussion group. Their Friends of the Library will hold a book sale on March 2. Call or watch for details.

Skiing on the South Shore....

The trails are open to the public at no charge. World's End requires minimal parking fee ($1.50) and trail maps for its 251 acres can be picked up at the gate house. A map of Whitney and Thayer Woods will be published within the next few months and also will be available at World's End or by contacting the headquarters of the Trustees of Reservations in Milton. Colored markers guide skiers through the eight miles of mostly flat trails at Wampatuck. Both Wampatuck and World's End close at 4 p.m.

The Norris Reservation off of Route 123 in Norwell Center offers basically one trail that reaches the North River and circles back. Passing through a pine grove, by a pond and over a few hills, it is a pleasant route while not an especially demanding one.

World's End can be entered via Martin's Lane in Hingham. It extends out onto the Massachusetts Bay and presents a magnificent view of Boston. Good skiing conditions require a heavy snowfall in order to avoid wind blown bare patches.

- Whitney and Thayer Woods, off of Route 3A opposite Sohier Street in Cohasset, consists of many hilly and flat trails that are usually well traveled by skiers.

Other alternatives include golf courses. Concern for the protection of the greens has caused some courses to discourage skiers from using their unlandscaped grounds. It is therefore advised to call before venturing out.

Exploring areas that are not maintained as ski trails and therefore are not patrolled regularly pose potential dangers. Since injury, equipment failure and losing one's way are always possibilities, it is important to let someone know where you are going and how long you expect to be skiing.

At 68, Dr. Friedman can't call it quits. . .

in 1955, opening up a practice on Myrtle Street.

An internist and family practitioner, Dr. Friedman found the delays of a single person practice were bothersome. For instance, he had to run blood samples taken in his office over to South Shore Hospital for testing. So he suggested to some other Rockland physicians that they share an office with a lab and X-ray facilities on the spot.

None of the Rockland doctors liked the idea, but other colleagues at South Shore Hospital were interested. Meeting on Sundays for planning sessions, five of them decided to open a group practice.

In 23 years, the South Shore Medical Center at 75 Washington Street has swelled from the five originals — Dr. Friedman, Dr. Arthur Garceau, Dr. Wallace Kemp, Dr. Collins and Dr. Garland — to about 30 doctors in various specialities.

The convenience is illustrated in an anecdote Dr. Friedman related: One of his patients, a 91 year-old Abington woman, slipped on the ice recently and broke a wrist. She was X-rayed and fitted with a cast at the Medical Center, all in a matter of 15 or 20 minutes.

While he was seeing her, Dr. Friedman said, the patient — "a very sharp lady" — reminded him of the time she suffered a similar accident in 1960, breaking her other wrist.

At the time, he said, he had put a splint on her arm and sent her up to South Shore Hospital at around 10 a.m. He went over there himself around 4 p.m. and was horrified to see his patient still in the waiting room because the orthopedist wasn't there.

Medicine has changed a great deal over the 30 years Dr. Friedman has been in practice. Almost all new doctors coming out of training today are specialists or sub-specialists.

DR A. Frederick Friedman

When he was a student and young doctor, he says, "we saw the whole patient, not just a heart or a pair of lungs." A doctor then might treat generations of family members, and be aware of financial and other problems.

Now, he says, many doctors are only interested in their specialities. "The holistic approach has been lost" as medicine has become more complex and expensive.

Dr. Friedman hasn't taken on any new patients in 10 years, except on an emergency basis. Some of them he's known for 30 years. "These people are almost like family," he says.

A big group of them, up to 100, are patients in nursing homes. ("I have an affinity for older people," he says), and the nursing homes were worried when they heard about his retirement.

It's very hard to get doctors to go to nursing homes, Dr. Friedman says. Most patients are on Medicaid, which pays less than the normal rates. It involves getting the car out and driving around. But, he hastens to add, his own nursing home patients will be seen by other doctors.

A 15-year resident of Norwell, Dr. Friedman is looking forward to a busy retirement that will allow him to catch up on all the things he hasn't had time for.

"I don't play golf," he smiles, "but I do a lot of gardening." He's also fond of music and the theater, and hopes to get up to Boston more.

He'll have more time, too, to visit his children in New York. Carla Phoebe, 31, is a cardiologist married to a cardiologist, and Robert David, 29, is a professor of mathematics at Columbia University.

He also has, he gestures, "a whole stack of things" to read, and plans on brushing up his German and French.

The Friedmans may do some traveling abroad, too, He has a half-brother and several nieces and nephews living in France.

Although he's leaving patient care behind, he may do a little teaching and medical paper processing.

But now, as he reflects back on 30 years of treating patients, some of whom he's known since they were small babies, he admits to very mixed feelings. It's hard to say goodbye to a lifelong dream.

PATCHES by Lois MARTIN

By Lois Martin

Not quite the Original Amateur Hour, but something like that. It's called a piano bar but it had more import.

And it became apparent as the evening wore on that I must have been the only person in the world who didn't know what happened at the Lenox piano bar.

It was a smallish area. The fullsize grand piano takes up most of the space with the chairs around it. Then there are additional tables in the room.

It was the evening following the New England Press Association convention, held at the nearby Sheraton. Some of us 'stayed over.' That, incidentally, is different from a 'sleepover' only in that the 'girls' involved were grown women. Other than that, the silliness, fun, foolishness is entirely intact.

PATCHES

Anyway, we sauntered into the piano bar expecting quiet background music to our conversation. Naive.

Predominant in the room was Ellen White. I think that's her name. She has been, she said, playing the piano there for 43 years. I promise you she's getting the hang of it.

At first, Ellen, dressed in her multi-colored spangled top, addressed the keyboard with the practiced authority of an orchestra's conductor, or maybe like Julia Child with her cuisine accoutrements and little towel at her waistband.

Thing is, Ellen, a woman worthy of the full rather than the baby grand, took at her music, filling up the keyboard with her fingers and the room with robust chords of familiar standards. "I'm In the Mood For Love," for example. Till those sitting in what I grew to believe were "their seats" surrendered to heads nodding in synchrony and lips that near caressed the words to songs they knew as well as the composer.

My awakening came when Ellen enjoined the gathering to hush during a rendition offered by Harvey. By then I had scanned 'the family' and felt assured that Harvey was as familiar to the circle as Aunt Hattie was to Aunt Ruth's Hilltop House.

Harvey sang. I listened. But the others were doing more. They were preparing. He baptized the evening with baritone. But then they started popping up out of everywhere. A soprano in a blue dress offered her lilt. Ray Someone who'd been singing there a quarter of a century, somebody said, stepped into the room from the hallway and burst into song. It was a 1950s musical, for gosh sakes. People didn't speak. They sang. "Because of You . . ." "Am I Blue?" "Lullaby of Broadway."

There was a woman in a wheelchair in 'her seat' to whom everyone gave deference.

Before long I grew wary. The man with the beard would probably jump up and sing in a minute. He did. Fred Shaw was on the other side of the piano and within moments was merging comedy with Italian Opera, and well.

I tapped the lady in the wheelchair on the shoulder. "Do you sing, too?" I asked . . . "No," she said, "but I know all the words."

And she did.

As the singers, spurred by warm reception, reached in memory for words of more old favorites, it was to her they looked for mouthed words.

Then out of the right hand corner burst a bevy of young women, who sang with the delight intended in music. Harmonizing in their jeans, belting out Barbra Streisand's stuff, leaning into show tunes, they merried away the evening in the showtime of Boylston Street, Ellen White's Amateur Hour.

Inadequate as I was to the pristine grouping, I lingered beyond my bedtime, certain that if I left a star would be born in my absence.

Surely, I thought, I play some instrument, since one man doled out his soul through a harmonica. Had I access to two spoons, I could have slipped away to the Ladies Room long enough to nail down "I Believe" or something.

But my contribution to the evening was not to sing at all. They have no idea how much they owe me for that.

I'd like to go back sometime, to see the old gang which allowed me to be guest to their brief moments on stage. I wish them well. The Lenox has its forte in that piano bar. And it's available even to the woman in the wheelchair, an honored customer, and to me, the ones who know all the words.

Neil Simon comedy opens at Nickerson Theatre

"I Ought To Be In Pictures," Neil Simon's 18th comedy opens at the Nickerson Theatre Wednesday, Feb. 6, as the fourth production of the current premiere season for Norwell's new professional theatre company.

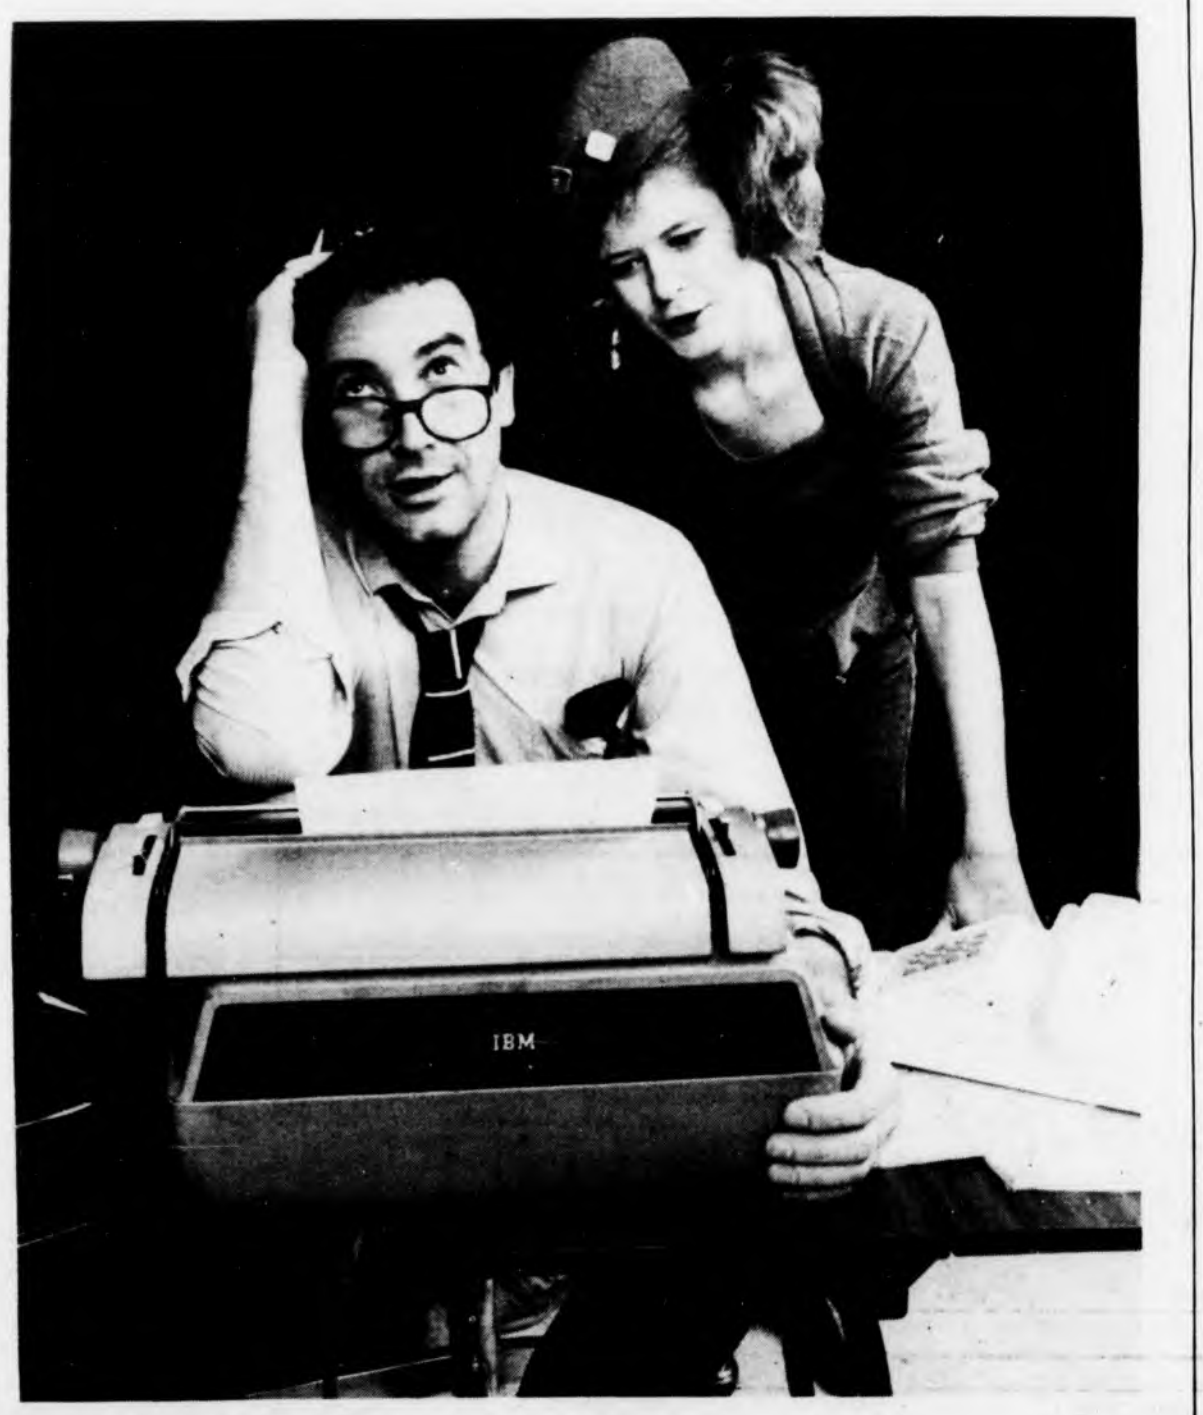
Directed by John Fogle, the three-member cast includes Stephanie Voss as Steffy; Dori Arnold as Libby, and Randall Forsythe as Herb. Set design is by Joan Brancale, costumes by Craig Sonnenberg and lighting by Joanne Zaharis.

John Fogle directed Kevin Wade's new comedy "Mr. & Mrs." for the Gloucester Stage Company this past season, and Peter Shaffer's "Equus" for Portsmouth's Theatre by the Sea. In 1982, he directed another Kevin Wade play, "Key Exchange," which received wide critical acclaim. He has also directed for the Cape Ann Repertory Theatre, the Charles Playhouse and Barton Square Playhouse.

Stephanie Voss comes to the Nickerson from Theatre by the Sea in Portsmouth where as a member of the resident acting company she played such leading roles as Lizzie in "The Rainmaker," Emilia in "Othello," Sonya in "Uncle Vanya," Helga in "Deathtrap," Edith Frank in "The Diary of Anne Frank," and Dora Strong in "Equus."

Randall Forsythe has appeared off-Broadway with the Manhattan Theatre Club, the West Park Theatre and the Cubiculo Theatre. Locally, he has performed with the Windham Summer Repertory and at Brandeis University in "Major Barbara," "The Hostage," "Lord Scarecrow," and "Hedda Gabler."

Dori Arnold recently returned from touring with the Milwaukee Repertory Theatre. She has appeared at the Cincinnati Playhouse in "Fifth of July," at the Pittsburgh Public Theatre in "The Life of Galileo" and off-Broadway in "The Seagull." Last season she played the title tole in "The Diary of Anne Frank" at Theatre by the Sea.



"I Ought To Be In Pictures" deals with the relationship between a writer and his grown daughter when they are reunited after a lapse of many years. The father is a once-successful Hollywood writer on the skids. His daughter, 19, bright, confident and eager, hopes the father who abandoned his family 16 years ago in Brooklyn can use his "influence" to get her into films! The result is a finely-tuned combination of hilarity and honesty.

Since 1961, Neil Simon has been America's foremost writer of contemporary comedies. His chain of success began with his first Broadway play, "Come Blow Your Horn" and has included such smash hits as "Barefoot in the Park" (1963), "The Odd Couple" (1965), "Sweet Charity" (1966), "Plaza Suite" (1968), "The Sunshine Boys" (1972) and "California Suite" (1976). In March, 1983, "Brighten Beach Memoirs," a play based on Simon's own youth, opened on Broadway and was hailed by critics and voted Best Play by the New York Drama Critics' Circle and won the 1983 Outer Critics Circle Award, two of the theatre's most prestigious awards.

"I Ought To Be In Pictures" will continue at the Nickerson through March 9. Performances are Tuesday through Thursday at 8 p.m.; Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m., Sunday matinee at 2 p.m. and Sunday evening at 7. Tickets for Friday and Saturday evenings are $15 and $12 for all other performances.

The new Nickerson Theatre is located just off Rte. 3, Exit 14, in Accord Park, Norwell.

For a detailed brochure on the season, call or write the Nickerson Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Accord (Norwell), 871-2400.

Randall Forsythe is Herb and Dori Arnold is Libby in a scene from Neil Simon's "I Ought To Be In Pictures" opening Feb. 6 at the Nickerson Theatre as the fourth production of the premiere season for the new Norwell theatre. Directed by John Fogle, the comedy will continue through March 9, performances are Tuesday through Thursday at 8 p.m.; Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m.; Sunday matinee at 2 p.m. and Sunday evening at 7 p.m.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Many moons ago, here on the South Shore, S.S. Pierce delivered weekly, the baker would stop by and the milk man delivered our dairy needs. A trip to the supermarket was a sometime thing. Now, there's another mode of food shopping I've discovered—food coops in Pembroke and Marshfield. Depending on which is handier, you can save both time and money. Rte. 14 in Pembroke is the site of the Pilgrim Foods Coop sponsored by the Greater Plymouth Association for Retarded Citizens, where a $15 membership fee entitles you to call in your order each week for bulk grains, homemade breads and pastries, natural juices and crackers, fresh fish, and much, much more. As a licensed state vocational program for mentally retarded adults staffed by instructors, the trainees pick berries in the summer and native fruits and vegetables that are then prepared as preserves and relishes. Here is their recipe for the relish made from our native cranberry bogs:

FRESH CRANBERRY RELISH

Put 4 c. cranberries and two oranges, unpeeled, through the chopper using coarse knife. Add 2 c. sugar and mix well. Use with poultry, meat or fish. Yields one quart.

Carole Tagg, executive director at the Pembroke Community Center, explains how you can cut down on that big chunk that shopping a crowded supermarket takes out of one's day. You can also save money in the process by merely calling in your order and having it packed and ready for you later in the week. Buying your rice, flour and grains in bulk is economical, especially if you team up with some friends or neighbors who would like to share with you. In these days of high food prices, we hate to throw away foods and if you have left over cereals such as oatmeal, cream of wheat, rice or nearly any other cereal, just add it to your bread batter. Stir it in without changing the other ingredients. If it has become stiff, heat it in the double boiler to soften. Mary Wright found herself with two cups of oatmeal left-over and it was the inspiration for these cookies which she made for her son and called

TIM'S LEFTOVER COOKIES

1½ c. cooked, cooled oatmeal
2 eggs, beaten
1/2 c. each white and whole wheat flour
1 tsp. cinnamon
1/2 tsp. each nutmeg, baking powder, baking soda
1/4 tsp. salt
1/2 c. raisins

Mix oatmeal with eggs and sift in dry ingredients. Mix well and add raisins. Drop by spoonful on greased sheet. Bake for 10 min. at 375 degrees.

The first time I ever heard of a food coop was about 12 years ago when Carole Steiner began one in her garage at her Marshfield home. Carole has gone on to other things, so Marylou Tribou and Joanne Brennan are in charge of Project Food which has grown to include sixty families. A non-profit program, Joanne says it attracts people who want to save money, while at the same time eating better. Membership here involves a work commitment averaging four hours a month which is fulfilled on one day as either a worker, coordinator, treasurer, or checkout. They, too, have all sorts of foods that are available every other Wednesday at the parish hall of the Congregational Church. Fresh local fish, natural foods and grains, eggs and just about everything you need is available, except staples such as paper and cleaning products. Joanne's children love to snack on these wholesome treats which can also substitute as a nourishing breakfast for those who are running behind schedule in the morning.

SESAME APPLE BARS

1½ c. plain, toasted wheat germ
3/4 ea. finely chopped dried apple, toasted sesame seeds and finely chopped raw cashew nuts
1/4 tsp. cinnamon
1/2 c. honey
3T safflower oil

Into medium-sized bowl mix first five ingredients. Place honey and oil in small saucepan. Bring to rolling boil, stirring, for 5 min. Pour hot liquid over wheat germ mixture and mix before turning into oiled 8" x 8" pan. Press down with back of your spoon. Cool for 5 min., before pressing down again. Slice with oiled knife. Makes 15 bars. Wrap and refrigerate each bar.

Cohasset Mariner

vol. VII, no. 17 | 383-6731 | thursday, february 14, 1985 | 30 cents

This is the Gilbert Tower Memorial plaque to be given this week to the Cohasset Historical Society. The inscription in the middle is the original wood piece from the First Parish steeple which Gilbert wrote upon in 1898. (Carol McCann)

Gilbert's centennial celebration

By Jane Lane

It's likely that anyone who has lived in Cohasset anytime during the past century, has heard of Gilbert Tower. He was a legend during his own lifetime, a man who created and thrived in controversy and conversation.

Gilbert died last April at the age of 99. He led an eventful life, one that will be remembered for its pursuit of a better future for his birthplace.

In his later years, Gilbert was an active member of the Old Goats, a group of mature Cohasset gentlemen. It is an elite membership, one that shirks from publicity but not from strong companionship and conversation.

Gilbert is remembered fondly by his fellow club members. Collectively, they decided that his passing should not be without observance. In memorium to the man who wore proudly the title of Cohasset Honorary Engineer, the Old Goats have institited an award.

The Gilbert Tower Award will be granted annually to the Cohasset High School student who has composed the best town planning essay.. The first award will be granted next fall.

The announcement of the annual award is scheduled to be made at a luncheon Friday, February 15, the centennial celebration of Gilbert's birth.

This is an award that certainly would have made Gilbert proud. He was never one to sit back and remain idle. Indeed, it was after his retirement as a naval architect from the Fore River Shipyard at the age of 75, that Gilbert gained particular notoriety. Barely a week would pass without his composing a dissertation on some aspect of municipal planning or zoning. Town Meeting wouldn't have been the same without his constant flow of suggestions, amendments and motions.

He would sit for hours and write oppressively-lengthy letters to the local newspapers about issues with which he was concerned. Always, in some manner, they were related to planning.

With pride, he would sign these compositions , "Gilbert Tower, Honorary Town Engineer." He was a proponent of planned growth for Cohasset, a subject he felt was avoided by the planning board. In 1975, he had several, mostly negative comments, to say about the planning board.

"The town has a planning board, but its members have their minds on other matters and they are not buckling down to town planning. That is why the writer had an article included in the Town Meeting Warrant to give the town an opportunity to ask or tell the planning board to please do some planning for the town. . . The planning board should suggest or propose plans for the town to accept or reject. . . Cohasset's plan for gradual natural growth, which is inevitable whether we want it or not. Cohasset must have more dwelling units for moderate income people. More parking areas for more cars are inevitable, and more town streets which must be laid out by the selectmen before someone builds a house where a new town street should be."

The essay award contest, in tribute to Gilbert's combined literary and engineering talents, will be decided each year by a panel of selected judges. They will include Ed Sheehan, chairman of the high school social studies department, Bill Kite, chairwood of the English department, David Cutler,

Town meeting to review 68 articles

Almost 70 articles will await Town Meeting voters in April. It's a diverse warrant, chock full of appropriation requests to reconstruct Town Hall, a municipal garage, road resurafacing and the purchase of equipment and vehicles.

Several of the articles do not have specific price tags attached, much to the chagrin of Town Counsel Richard Henderson, who must work now to ensure the proper wording.

In fact, at their meeting Monday night, selectmen voted to allow yet another unspecified money article, this one to locate a fire hydrant on Atlantic Avenue near the Elm Court intersection. This article, formulated by a petition from local residents, was inserted into the annual Town Meeting warrant, although no costs have yet been estimated. Water Dept. Supt. Benjamin Curley will be gathering estimates of the project, which selectmen agreed will be expensive because of the ledge in the area and the need to construct a new water main along the street. Residents of the area, which include the Nothnagle, Humphrey, Churchill, Kleinz and Gleason families, noted in their petition that the hydrant is needed for greater fire protection safety. Fire Capt. Mark Trask also indicated his support of the article.

Among the articles to be decided at the April 6 meeting will be a request to appropriate a sum of money to construct an addition to Town Hall. This addition, which will double the amount of office space within the building, was developed by the Town Hall Study Committee.

According to plans presented to selectmen Monday night, the addition would be constructed to the right

An in depth look at proposed changes

by Lisa J. Messersmith

The Cohasset Planning Board has called a public hearing for March 6, to discuss proposed changes to the zoning by-laws which will take the form of nine articles to be presented at the Annual Town Meeting.

The Planning Board has scheduled this meeting not only to air their concerns about the future — population density, drainage, appropriate use of land, and aesthetic value of Cohasset — but also to hear the opinions and concerns of the residents of the town.

The first three articles involve minimum lot requirements specifically in residential zones A, B, and C. The present area requirement for residential zone A is 12,000 square feet. The planning board recommends the by-law be changed to require a minimum of 18,000 square feet.

In residential zone B, the proposed change in the by-law is greater; the planning board recommends the minimum lot requirement to change from 20,000 square feet to 35,000 square feet.

The proposed change in residential zone C requires the minimum lot size be 60,000 square feet, a fifty percent increase in the present lot requirement of 30,000 square feet.

Planning board member Daniel Cotton studied all the residential building permits in the town over the past five years in order to see the actual size of the lots in comparison to the zoning by-law requirements. What Cotton found was of particular importance in the formation of the zoning by-law changes.

"In reality," Chairman Christine Bassett said, "the practice has been to build on much larger lots in the past five years" than what the by-laws required.

The average size building lot for residential zone A in the past five years was 24,000 square feet, for zone B the average was 58,000 square feet, and for zone C the average was 2.8 acres.

Although these statistics are heartening for the planning board in light of density control, drainage, and value of the land, the members want to ensure no wrong turns are taken. "The results of the study may or may not be a reflection of land now becoming available," Cotton said. In the future by proposing these three particular changes in the by-laws, the planning board feels it can help ensure responsible planning of residential areas of Cohasset in the future.

Four other articles propose changes in the light industry and highway business zoning by-laws. The first two-part article involves commercial coverage, maximum structural and maximum permitted. "We have attempted to do for the first time," Bassett said, "what we call coverage."

The planning board recommends the maximum structural coverage in a commercial zone to be no more than 25 percent of the lot size. Structures include any king of building.

The maximum permitted coverage, recommended by the members, is to be no more than 60 percent of the lot size. This coverage includes all things man-made, buildings, driveways, tennis courts.

These changes were made "partly in response to 3A," Bassett said. "We have to ask ourselves: do we want a black top jungle out there? The answer is obviously no."

Town computer equipment

Selectmen are scheduled to meet next week with Town Accountant William Signorelli to discuss his recommendations whether to purchase additional computer equipment currently on loan from DataNational.

In an effort to solve some of the current processing problems with the town's computer system, DataNational has loaned equipment and software from Digital Corp. The town must return the equipment to DataNational by March 11, or indicate its willingness to purchase the additional programs.

The price of the total package will be $35,140. If the town decides not to purchase the equipment, DataNational will charge about $1350 for the three-month loan.

Democrats to hold hearing

A public hearing will be held at 8:15 p.m., Monday, Feb. 25, at the Cohasset Community Center, 3 North Main Street, to hear comments and suggestions for amending the Platform of the Massachusetts State Democratic Party.

The hearing is being called by the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee and the recently elected Delegates to the May 18 Massachusetts Democratic State Issues Convention, which will rewrite the Platform.

"We are looking for input from Cohasset residents, and hope to hear suggestions about how the Platform should be drafted," said Donna McGee, Chairman of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee and an ex-officio Delegate to the Convention.

Five Delegates from Cohasset to the Convention were elected at a Caucus held at 2 p.m. Saturday Feb. 9 at the Town Hall. Elected were: Karen Corcoran, 4 Stevens Lane; Mary Richard, 703 Jerusalem Road; John McNabb Jr., 53 Pond Street; Edwin Tebbetts, 9 Jerusalem Road Drive; and Paul Donovan, 11 Bancroft Road. Congressman Gerry Studds, a member of the Town Committee, is an ex-officio Delegate from Cohasset.

Elected as Alternate Delegates were: Charlotte LeLand, 9 Margin Court; and Fred Koed, 92 Pleasant St.

A copy of the current Massachusetts Democratic Party Platform is available at the desk of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library or from any of the Delegates.

Central cemetery meeting

The Annual Meeting of the Cohasset Central Cemetery will be held in Trueblood Hall, Unitarian Parish House Saturday, Feb. 23.

According to Section 4 of Article VII of the by-laws of the Cemetery, "each owner shall be a member of the Association and shall have one vote as such member at each regular or special meeting of the Association which is duly called."

The purposes of this meeting are:

1. To hear the reports of Committee chairman.
2. To hear the report of the Treasurer and to act on the budget for the coming year.
3. To hear the report of the President.
4. To hear the report of the Nominating Committee and to act thereon — (Election of Directors).
5. Election of a Nominating Committee by ballot from nominations made by the Board of Directors.
6. To act on any other businesses that may properly come before the meeting.

According to the by-laws, a quorum at Annual Meeting shall be fifteen members. We hope that you will attend.

Little change in local races

The local political races have changed little the past week, with a couple exceptions.

James L. Gallagher, a member of the Recreation Commission, has filed a notice of intent for the unexpired term of former Selectman John DeBassio. DeBassio formally notified the Town Clerk last week of his resignation from that board. He had two years remaining in his term.

Rocco Laugelle has also filed his intent to run for re-election. No one has formally announced a candidacy for that three-year seat on the Board of Selectmen.

Peter Laugelle, who was one of the first to file a candidacy for public office, has withdrawn. He had intended to campaign against incumbent Water Commissioner Lot Bates. He withdrew from the race Tuesday.

John Burns, a local dentist, has filed an intent to run for a seat currentlyheld by Marilyn Sweeney on the Board of Health. Michael Patrolia has filed papers for the Board of Asssessors seat; Joseph Nedrow has filed his re-election campaign intentions; Robert Beggan has decided to run for the Recreation Commission, and John O'Toole will try to retain his seat on the Planning Board.

No building permits for roof

Building Inspector Edward Poskus notified the Superintendent of Schools last week that contractors have yet to apply for building permits for the high school and Deer Hill School roofs.

Although Poskus suggested the permit fees be doubled, selectmen this week recommended that the inspector first issue a cease and desist order. Selectmen Mary Jane McArthur and Rocco Laugelle agreed that Poskus "should treat this as he would anyone else and order all work stopped until the fees are paid.

Poskus notified Supt. Eugene Crowell in December that building permits for the two major projects had never been requested. The architect for the roof repairs, Frank Bagge, notified the two contractors, MacDonald Sprague and Cadillac Roofing, that the fees must be paid immediately.

Because the fees have yet to be paid, Poskus suggested doubling the payment -$3870 for the high school and $1270 for the Deer Hill School. Angered by the lack of response by the two firms, selectmen suggested that before the fees are doubled, the building inspector should require all work be stopped. They also noted that the town accountant should stop final payments to the contractors.

A discussion on student smoking

An outright ban on smoking within the high school is unlikely, but the present policy must be made more enforceable.

A sub committee formed to look into problems with the smoking policy and to formulate alternatives, agreed that few people are aware of the current policy. Teachers and students alike, they said, are violating the present policy because of the incongruous language within the policy, and their individual failure to study the statement.

The discussion took place last Thursday night during a panel discussion held by the subcommittee at the high school. Several students came to the hearing, although few parents were in attendance.

The committee, comprised of teachers, administrators, school committee members and the PSO, decided that a schoolwide survey of teachers and students should be completed. The referendum will determine the concerns and questions the faculty and students share regarding the smoking policy in grades 9-12.

The smoking policy, which was established in 1974, strictly prohibits students from smoking in the junior high grades. The policy, committee members emphasized, only tolerates and does not condone smoking. It affects only students in grades 9-12. According to the policy, there is no smoking allowed within the school building. Smoking is allowed outside the building, but only before and after school hours. No smoking is ever allowed from the main entrance to the junior high wing, in the courtyard, and also during school hours of 7:45 a.m. to 2:03 p.m. in front of the school building.

Everyone at the meeting last week agreed the language of the policy needs clarification for enforcement purposes by the faculty, and also so students will be aware of the ruling.

Senior class students at the meeting told committee members that there are a total of 39 smokers from a total of 127 students. According to Health Education Director Michael Gill, that represents a 25 percent average. The national statistics, he noted, is more in the 12 percent range. A glimmer of hope, Gill said, is that although the senior class smoking percentage may be high, there are indications that the number is decreasing in the lower grades.

By the conclusion of the discussion meeting, Gill and the other panel members agreed that the primary method of enforcing any smoking policy is through continued and early education. When children are knowledgeable about the disastrous effects of the habit, the numbers of smokers will be reduced.

Currently, according to the students at the meeting, there are many more high school female smokers than male smokers. Women's bathrooms, frequented by smoking female students, are places all non smokers avoid. Constant complaints by the custodial staff, the administration and other students, have prompted recent clean-ups by the facility's users.

School Principal Richard Streeter asked the students why the female bathrooms, specifically the one near the the new north wing study hall,are used so pervasively as a smoking lounge for female students. "What is it, why can't they smoke in the pit (the designated outside smoking area)? Don't they want to be seen ?" he questioned.

The students answered that many of the girls will not go outside in the cold weather, and even in the warmer month, do not want to be viewed by faculty members in the pit. One student stated that most students at the high school are unaware of the present policy, "but even if they were, I doubt it would be followed."

Teachers Association President George Fortin admitted that he, and most faculty members are also unknowledgeable about the policy. Most staff people rarely enforce it, Gill said. He also admitted that although it is part of the school handbook, he had never read the page-long policy statement.

Principal Streeter explained that enforcement of any policy is difficult because of the demand on the faculty. Also, he noted, the location of the areas where students most frequently congregate, necessitate patrols by certain teachers in those specific areas. The remaining teachers are rarely called upon to enforce the policy.

Fortin agreed that teachers do not have much time to patrol the corridors and bathrooms in between classes

ENFORCING A JUDGEMENT

Generally, if no appeal is filed within the time allowed by court rules or by statute, the judgement in a tort suit becomes final. What remains is for the plaintiff to enforce the judgement, that is, to get what is coming to him. If he has won a money judgement and, if the defendent does not pay, the lawyer must set the machinery in motion that will compel payment. In most states the lawyer will take out what is called a property execution form. He takes it, along with a copy of the judgement, to a sheriff or marshall and asks him to make the collection that is due the plaintiff.

Under many diverse circumstances one is entitled to collect for injuries suffered whether there is physical damage to property or personal injury to one's body. The facts of the case along with precedent setting cases play a major role in the successful outcome of your claim. For matters this serious it is best to contact professional legal counsel. LAW OFFICES OF RICHARD PRICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Rt. 3A, Cohasset, 383-9882. Call for an appointment.

DISC PROBLEMS

Disc problems are generally either degenerative or due to an injury. If the degeneration is due to the aging process, little can be done. However, disc degeneration, a potentially dangerous situation, can also be caused by a disturbance in normal nutrition. This is a condition that is fairly common in young and middle-aged persons and can be identified by a chiropractic examination. The other category of disc involvement is "trauma." A fall or blow to any part of the spine can result in an injury to the disc. The disc reacts by becoming inflamed. Symptoms of inflammation include pain, heat and swelling. A chiropractor, using spinal adjustment, may be able to relieve the symptoms of nutritional disc degeneration. This will help to restore a normal flow of nutrients to the disc, leading to a healthier state.

A total state of well-being is an achievable goal. Don't let such discomfort become a chronic situation. Have a chiropractic exam and learn the reasons for your situation and what applications are available to correct the situation. The science of chiropractic offers a natural approach to meeting the needs of your health goals. Panel discusses school smoking policy when they should be preparing for the next period. Streeter added, "I refuse to believe that the only reason I am paid for my job here is to stand at the pit and allow students to smoke."

Panel members also noted that most of the students who smoke at the high school are doing so illegally. There was some discussion that students who smoke in the designated outside area must have parental permission. Rather than questioning all students, it might be feasible to have photo identification cards given to those students. This procedure is followed in several areas school systems. One panel member explained that I.D. cards are easily manufactured by students, and the concept may be useless.

Several of the students attending the meeting agreed administrators are not condoning the habit, but simply tolerating the reality that certain students and teachers that most students do not understand the policy as written. Panel members agreed that at the very least, the policy should be reworded. "I always thought you just couldn't smoke in the front of the school. I was suspended once for smoking in the rear," one male student claimed. Panel members concluded the student had been smoking during class hours, which is also forbidden in the policy.

Maxwell Pounder, who attended the meeting, asked if by allowing a policy, the schools are in fact, condoning smoking. The very existance of a policy allowing smoking on school property, represents an attitude of acceptance, he said.

Panel members emphasized the school faculty and do smoke. One student complained that students should be granted the same rights as teachers, who are allowed to smoke within the building.

Fortin answered that separate lounges for teachers would be a good idea. But, he added, prohibiting all staff members from smoking in that lounge "would quickly become a negotiable item" in the teachers' contract.

Panel members agreed that teachers are above the age of 18, a Constitutionally-protected privilege which thereby allows persons to smoke. The majority of high school students are under that age limitation. According to the legal jurisdiction of the schools, students can be restricted from several activities, including smoking and drinking.

State issues public health standards of heat

State Secretary Michael Connolly recently released standards of heat to local Boards of Health after an increase in calls to his Citizen Information Service following the recent cold wave.

Public health regulations require landlords of residential property who supply heat as part of the rent to provide this service from Sept. 16 until June 14.

Every habitable room with bathroom facilities must be heated to at least 68 degrees from 7 a.m. until 11 p.m. and at least 64 degrees from 11:01 p.m. until 6:59 a.m. The maximum temperature should not exceed 78 degrees.

Under these regulations, landlords are also directed to " . . . maintain equipment in good working condition." Also, certain space heaters, such as those which burn kerosene, range oil or No. 1 fuel oil may not be used in residences.

Places of employment are covered in state law; "(any) building in which a person is employed shall be properly heated during the period from Oct. 15 to May 15 according to reasonable rules and regulations . . . " The Division of Industrial Safety issued guidelines in 1977 which include:

Factories, machine shops, 60-62 degrees; Foundries, 50-60; Offices, schools, 66-68; Public buildings, 60-68; Restaurants, 62-66; Stores, 65; Theaters, 65-68; and Warehouses, 62-65.

For further questions, please call the Citizen Information Service, a division of Secretary of State Michael J. Connolly's office. Calls are answered Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. at 727-7030 (Metro Boston); or on a toll free line, 1-800-392-6090.

Health board supports appealed

In response to a meeting held last week with the Sewer Commission, the Board of Health has decided to support the commission's fight to obtain federal and state funds for on-site septic system repairs.

A meeting was held last week in which the commission attempted to persuade Board of Health members to support their efforts to gain funding for the alternative sewage disposal project. The commission is in the midst of an appeal to the Environmental Protection Agency to overturn denial of funds for the on-site repairs and extension of the central sewer system to 350 Cohasset homes.

The Board of Health has continually opposed the commission's plan to repair on-site systems, and has repeatedly stated its preference for central sewer systems.

Commission members last week said that the town needs unified support from town officials if the EPA appeal is to be successful. Repeated opposition to the alternative plan by the Board of Health has damaged Cohasset's request for funding, commission members said.

The commissioners drafted a letter this week for the Board of Health members to review and accept. The letter, which was to be forwarded to the EPA stated:

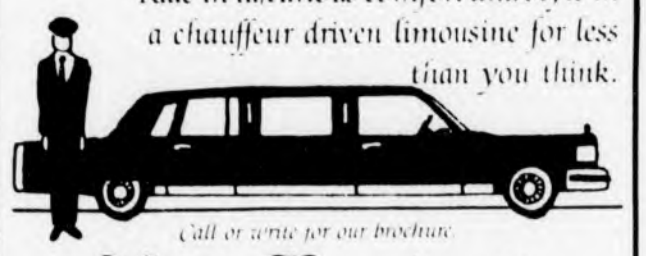
"We submit this letter to clarify the Board of Health's statement read at Town Meeting on June 19, 1984, and submitted to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, MEPA Unit on September 7, 1984.

"Our statement to the Town Meeting on June 19, 1984 was based on the Board's preference for the plan which provided a more extensive area of central sewer service. Our statement of June 19, 1984, should not be construed to imply that the Board of Health is not concerned with the protection of the public water supply and public health in areas outside of central sewer service.

"We do wish to express support for the Town's efforts to obtain Federal and State funding for on-site corrections in those areas outside of sewer service."

The Health Board voted Tuesday night to support the following letter: "Following our meeting February 7, the Board of Health has agreed that in the interest of protecting public health, we support the town's efforts to obtain federal and state funding for on-site corrections in those areas outside of sewer service.

"This is not to imply that the Board of Health can assure the town that these repairs will be successful in the longterm, given that there is no site specific information available to us at the present time."



No Monday holiday meetings

Town Clerk Frances Marks has notified all municipal boards and committees that because Monday, Feb. 18, is a legal holiday in Massachusetts, Town Hall will be closed for all business.

According to Chapter 136 Section 12 of the state General Laws, a public building is not to be opened on a legal holiday. Town Counsel Richard Henderson has determined that no municipal committee meetings will be held on a legal holiday, and has recommended that scheduled meetings for Feb. 18 be changed to another date.

Selectmen, who regularly meet on Monday evenings, will meet Tuesday, Feb. 19at 7:30 p.m.

Every Child Deserves A Home of His Own
By Katie Pyle

At the age of 80, Grandma Holt still lives and places children in homes of their own!

I admire Grandma Holt very much because she brought my brother and me and many other children to homes because their parents couldn't take care of them. Now they live in peace with their families because of this one woman and her husband, Bertha and Harry Holt.

When they were both ready to start their family, they had six children of their own, then they adopted eight Korean children.

It began when Harry was a farmer during the 50's. He and his wife lived in peace with their six children. When one day Harry saw a television show about Korean children who were in trouble because of the Korean War. He felt he should help the Korean children get out of the war so they wouldn't get hurt. So he went to Korea and brought back eight children. Then he adopted them for his own.

He also helped the handicapped children that couldn't survive on their own. Harry was so concerned he went back to Korea and brought back more Korean children to families who wanted to adopt children because they couldn't give birth.

Then at age 65, Harry Holt died, but he and his wife and the agency had placed 47,000 children in 25 years.

Most of the children come from the Eastern and Western sides of the world. The children are Korean, Indian, South American, Vietnamese, and Filipino.

Today Bertha still lives, and at 80, she still is very healthy. She jogs every once in a while and she cooks and she still likes to work with children.

In Korean, "Halmoni" means Grandmother. So Mrs. Holt considers herself Grandma Holt, because she placed so many lost and sad children in new homes. Where they will grow to be doctors, lawyers, artists, etc. ...because Grandma Holt gave them "a home of their own".

That's why I respect "Halmoni" Holt. She's a hard working woman who helps lost children find new homes!

Swimming
By Joanne Brown

With all his might he threw it high,
With a sudden boom he hit the sky,
The rain fell down, fast and free,
A beautiful rainbow broke through the gleam,
The sea was waving, brisk and loud,
The fish of gold swam in a crowd,
The towers of rocks, sharp and steep,
Made him a diving board as he took his last leap,
The water was fresh, cold and clean,
As it hit his body, strong and lean,
He swam gracefully, from the bottom up,
Bravely he saved a very young pup,
Gathering seashells to make a collection,
He didn't take just any one, but those of perfection,
Faster and faster he glided across,
He made a sad face, as if something was lost,
Quickly he dove under, then under again,
Faster than the thunder, it had begun to rain,
Desperately he struggled to the surface,
But his life quickly ended, as if it had no purpose.

The End

Snow
By Amy Russell

Snow is like sugar falling from the sky.
Not to be mistaken with whipcream on a pie.
Look at the snowman in the Barry's front yard.
It looks like a chicken from McDonald's farm yard!

Snow is beautiful as you can see,
Not as beautiful, as beautiful as me.
Most people ski and some people sled,
Some even stay home and lie in their bed.

Though most people think the winter is fun,
Others wish for the summer sun.

A Christmas Poem
By Kristen Martin

Snow flakes fall, church bells ring,
Families go out a'carrolling.
Happy voices filled with glee,
Presents nestled under the tree.
Boys and girls are especially nice,
Even cleaning their rooms twice!
Children roasting beside the fire,
To their own little hearts desire.
Santa making his Christmas Eve trip,
A swerve here and there a dip.
A sleigh filled with parcels of joy,
A doll for a girl and ball for a boy.
I know myself Christmas is near,
From the people filled with cheer.

Warrant chock full of money requests

Proposed Town Hall addition

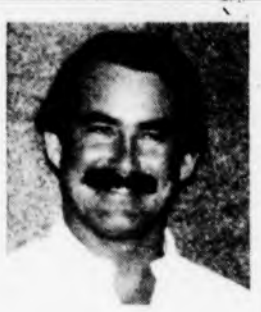
rear of the building, adjacent to the parking lot. Designed by retired architect Benjamin Blake, the addition would allow for 1150 square feet of space in the upper level, and 1020 feet in the lower level. Blake told selectmen that no firm construction cost estimates have been gathered, although he noted that preliminary designs would be 25 percent of the total fee. Blake told selectmen the study committee would have estimate figures prepared before the warrant is printed next month.

The Municipal Garage Study Committee, after meeting or several months, will present a proposal to purchase land and construct a facility in which town vehicles will be stored.

Among the 68 warrant articles is a request to hire a fulltime appraiser. The recommendation, supported by the Government Structure Study Committee, would create a fulltime position in the assessor's office, in the hope of mailing tax bills on time, and keeping revaluation records in order and up to date. Currently, according to Study Committee Chairman John McNabb, there is an appraiser who is employed by the office on a part time basis. The fulltime appraiser, along with fulltime clerical help, would alleviate the delays in mailing town tax bills.



Although selectmen agreed to include the article within the warrant, Selectman Frank England opposed the committee's recommendation to retain an elected board. He would like to see the Board of Assessors an appointed, rather than elected group. McNabb noted there was some dissension about this issue, but the committee voted 4-3 to recommend the continuation of an elected board. He suggested the town give a fulltime appraiser a try, before deciding to change the town bylaws and to switch to an appointed assessing board.

England argued that in the past three or four years, delays in processing tax bills have cost the town about $150,000 in indebtedness. He felt an appointed board would be a more professional, efficient method of maintaining revaluation records and developing tax bills.

Within the remainder of the warrant, there are several articles which request renovation work to the Town Hall and the police and fire complex. There is also an article which asks permission to dispose of the Independence building at the corner of South Main and Elm Streets. The former Gown Museum is no longer utilized, and selectmen have recommended either ☐ Carolyn Jane McLaughlin was born Thursday, Jan. 31. She is the daughter of Joseph & Marianne (Lewis) McLaughlin of 43 Surrey Drive.

☐ Seems that Steve Wigmore likes it better in the air than on the ground when it comes to buckets . . . last weekend he took his bucket to go sea clamming, and wound up falling in the sand (it was said there was more sand on him than on the clams). Put him in the air and there isn't anything he can't do.

☐ The folks at Leo's Exxon were a mighty happy bunch last Saturday, when they found out that the basketball team they sponsored won the season championship! Congratulations to the team.

☐ Paul Stanford did it again . . . much to everyone's pleasure, and due to his hard work, Paul made second honors at Xaverian for the second term. Good job!

☐ Seems that there has been a mix-up in Feslers, so let us straighten it out for you . . . Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fesler (with one "s") are still living in Cohasset and are still running and owning the Kit and Kaboodle in downtown Cohasset. They love it here, and have no desire to leave! Mr. and Mrs. Richard Fessler (2 "s") have left our town for Florida, due to a business transfer. They were unhappy to leave Cohasset, but had to do so. Now, let's hope that the Robert Feslers will not be asked why they haven't left for Florida yet, when indeed they have no intention of leaving our town or their Kit and Kaboodle!

☐ Cohasset made the Boston Herald again last week, this time with Norma Nathan telling her story of Hollywood on Jerusalem Road . . . sounds like the family involved has some grand stories to tell! Maybe they will write a book.

☐ Thank heaven that the Post Office waited until after Valentine's Day to go up on their stamp rate! We can be sure that we'll still get it right? Don't forget though, that the price of a stamp will be 22¢ starting Sunday, Feb. 17 (for first class mail that is.)

☐ Congratulations to Jennifer Plante, who won the Spelling Bee for the sixth grade, and to Corey DeSantis for coming in second in the event.

☐ Here's hoping that Mrs. Wheelwright is home soon, after her recent fall . . . when I last heard, she was doing well, and is probably home by now.

Crystal Coots mails a special Valentine mouse for someone special in her class.

☐ The sixth grade students at Deer Hill are doing a super job in their efforts to become news reporters. They enlisted some professionals and asked how they could learn to be reporters. There is a contest going on for the best news story, with the results to be known soon. It should be an exciting effort, and there will be some of the stories that will be published in the Mariner. Watch for them.

☐ Everyone is awaiting the Aerobic tapes that are to appear on Cable . . . Ann Taylor, Wendy White, Jenny Long, Cindy Conklin, Ginny Nussdorfer, Maggie O'Connor, Kirsten Rauhauser, Cheryl Turner, Christine Vivian, Kelly Freeman and Carol O'Brien all selected and taped their own music and choreographed their routines.

☐ Sure looks like Lillan Murray is following in Mom's footsteps. She is an officer of the Republican Council meeting which held its first general meeting a few weeks ago.

☐ Here's hoping that Josie DiGirolamo is better really fast and that she knows everyone is thinking of her!

☐ Throughout the town you can hear the undercurrents . . . who will run for what office, seems to be the common question and the answers don't have to be in for a while yet.

☐ Carla Lucas certainly scared all of the spectators at last weeks basketball game, when she hurt her head in a fall. Happy to report that all is well with her, look for her to be in the next game.

☐ Sure was nice to see the pictures and story on the newly formed CHS ski team. Though the season is almost over for this year, it will be an inspiration for many more to try and compete next year . . .

☐ The Division of Continuing Education Dean's List for the first semester at Massasoit Community College included these area students. They are Eileen Nardo of Cohasset, Janice Higgins and Teri Moore of Hingham, Lesley Eisner of Norwell and Brenda Mingolla of Scituate.

☐ Fitchburg State College released its Dean's List for the Fall semester recently. To be on the Dean's List a student must attain a grade average of 3.20 or better and two Cohasset grads are on the list. Sandra and Susan Goodwin, daughters of Helen and Gordon Goodwin of Buttonwood Lane, both majors in Computer Sciences, "made the grade" and are to be congratuiated for their efforts.

☐ That is the news for this week. The next batch of news should contain lots of vacation talk, so call it in to me whenever you think of it.

A memorial

We remember when the death of Gilbert Tower was announced to the crowd awaiting the commencement of last April's Town Meeting. Moderator William Weeks stood at the podium to announce that a quorum had not yet been attained.

He then proceeded to say that news had just been told to him that at the age of 99, Gilbert had just passed away. People quickly turned to each other, faces of grief staring at their neighbors as Weeks annunciated everyone's thought . . . Town Meeting will never be the same without him.

Some thought of Gilbert as an irrascible old man;, intelligent, well-educated, but bent on pontificating about one philosophy.

Editors of local newspapers would await each week, knowing that the mail would deliver a letter expounding the virtues of town planning, all hand written by Gilbert. It was an expected event, week after week. If an issue was in the most remote manner related to planning or zoning, Gilbert would have an opinion.

Now that he is gone from our community,in hindsight we can see what a valuable addition he was to Cohasset. Every community needs some color, someone who won't take the turns demanded of him, who questions every charted course. He was our Robert Frost who always insisted on taking the less-travelled path.

We are grateful for true "characters" such as Gilbert, who likely are a once-in-a-lifetime event. Realizing that this man was perhaps larger-than-life, his friends decided to memorialize him an a typically unusual manner. Without eulogy, his friends of the Old Goats have decided to institute a memorial award.

The Gilbert Tower Memorial Award will be given to the Cohasset High School student who composes the best essay on municipal planning. How appropriate that Gilbert's unending passion for planning and zoning should be continued through the youth of this community. That young residents of Cohasset should be introduced to the issues and problems confronting their town is a meangingful gesture by his friends, one that would have undoubtedly pleased Gilbert.

We at the Mariner are honored to serve as a contest judge. Along with municipal leaders and educators, publisher David Cutler will be reviewing the student essays. This is our distinct honor and privilege to serve our community and to honor Gilbert's memory.

The contest will formally begin next fall, when the high school will begin its government study unit. The students in certain grade levels will be assigned an essay to prepare for class. The best ones will be submitted to the contest judges.

Our wish is that this contest will succeed in igniting an interest in service to community, a devotion that consumed Gilbert's life. To follow in his path would be a course well charted.

Get well wishes

Our wishes for a speedy recovery are extended to Town Accountant William Signorelli. He has pneumonia and has been out of work for the past two weeks.

According to staff assistants, Bill is feeling a bit better this week. No news as to when he will return to Town Hall.

Everyone, including members of his staff, Town Hall employees, the advisory committee members and the Mariner, wish him well. Hurry back !

Letters

Don't be caught

To the Editor:

I realize it is difficult to avoid reliance on the statements of the sewer commissioners, there being no other elected officials able or willing to expose misrepresentation. The misrepresentations are legion, and have been repeated so often that they are being accepted as truths. Both the Mariner and the Ledger are guilty of this repetition. Having taken the trouble to research the matter carefully and provide an expose of the untruths and of the creative arithmetic, I find the repetition painful. I am most grateful, however, for the fair and friendly review given to my "Sewer Follies" treatise. This treatise included calculations which reveal clearly the cost fallacies that continue to be purveyed.

The paper's position, as far as it can be discerned, remains wrong, though probably from innocence rather than determined activist bias.

Your February 7 issue reports on Mr. DeSantis' ridiculous missive to 21 other towns, and quotes Mr. Guild as saying, " the letter has received tremendous response and support." Where is the evidence of this response? Have you seen it? I suggest that the typical response was in the order of "Let's not get involved with anyone capable of such an intemperate and inaccurate statement." Why not ask the Sewer Commissions in some of the other towns? Some contacted DEQE about it; why not ask the DEQE about the tone of the comments?

I suggest the imagined "tremendous response" is whistling in the dark. The horrendous mess that DeSantis and his acolytes have created, aided by the media, is coming unravelled, the still-concealed panic is growing, and its manifestation will be ever more intemperate and unsupportable statements.

So be on guard, and don't get caught up in it!

Supporting Cohasset

(This is a letter which was sent by the Town of Bourne to the EPA, in support of Cohasset's appeal. Ed.)

To: Mr. David A. Fierra
Director
Water Management Division
Region I
U.S. Environmental Protection Agency

The Town of Bourne is writing this letter in support of the Grant Appeal by the Town of Cohasset which is currently pending before your agency.

Representatives of the Town of Bourne have reviewed the pertinent documents on the issue dating back to the August 17, 1984 submittal by Cohasset to the EPA and have concluded that their request warrants the full and active endorsement of the Town of Bourne.

As is true for Cohasset, the Town of Bourne has been striving for years to develop a plan for the town which addresses its wastewater needs; satisfies its environmental and social concerns; is affordable, and is acceptabe to the townspeople. Throughout the 17-year history of wastewater planning in Bourne, our community has worked in close cooperation with the Commonwealth's Division of Water Pollution Control. To date, no less than six wastewater studies have been performed addressing Bourne's wastewater needs and recommending alternatives to address these needs. Throughout this long arduous process, we have had to cope with new federal laws and regulations; state cuts limiting wastewater discharges into the Cape Cod Canal; changes in funding and eligibility criteria, and changes in emphasis on structural vs. non-structural and regional vs. local solutions. Throughout this process, the town has taken direction from and looked for guidance to the Mass. Division of Water Pollution Control which has approved all of the past engineering studies performed for the town (the draft facilities plan has been currently under review by that agency since May of 1984).

It is Bourne's conclusion that if the Cohasset appeal is not successful, and the Cohasset facilities plan is not approved and funded as an I/A project, the project will die and the Bourne plan wil fall victim to the same fate. Of even more consequence is the inevitable result that similar projects in small communities throughout the Commonwealth will be dealt a severe, if not lethal, blow. That would be in direct contravention to the intent of federal law and regulations inspiring the I/A technology for small communities.

The far-reaching impact on wastewater programs for small communities of a negative decision by your agency on the Cohasset appeal should not be underestimated.

We would be pleased to provide you with any further information on the Bourne project should you believe it to be of assistance in your deliberations on the Cohasset appeal.

Very truly yours,
Board of Selectmen
Robert W. Parady
Robery J. Kilduff

Animal shelter is necessity, not luxury

What kennel are all the stray abandoned dogs being kept at in our area?

That's a good question, and it deserves a lengthy, informative answer. We currently have no kennel or pound that we use on a regular basis. We have reached a point in time where we must face a very real problem that exists not only in Hingham, but in most of the South Shore's communities.

The immediate towns of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Norwell, Scituate and Hanover have no animal shelter whatsoever. We have been without one since last June, when Shishone Kennels in Marshfield decided to close up shop.

Shishone Kennels operated a regional dog pound for over 10 years. They finally got fed up with the aggravation of dealing with the stray abandoned sick dogs that animal control officers brought in on a daily basis. Can't say as I blame them—it's a pretty depressing business to be in. I'm surprised they lasted that long!

By closing up their operation, they put the responsibility of housing and caring for abandoned dogs right back in our laps. Let's not kid ourselves—the responsibility is ours and we can't avoid it forever.

Stray dogs are now kept just about anywhere. In Hingham's case, some are taken to the Weymouth pound, some to the Hingham Animal Clinic, and the rest are kept in my garage.

That's right, folks—in my garage! If you have a better alternative, suggest it. My car would love to have its garage back.

Never in my wildest dreams did I ever expect to have Hingham's dog pound in my garage. But that's where it is...hopefully not for long. It would be great to have my kitchen sink free from dirty dog dishes. My trees, bushes and lawn would welcome acid rainfall—it's better than dog urine.

Now I know some of you are going to say, "Why can't we board them in another private kennel?" Look—private kennels want only clean, healthy, disease-free dogs—not the sick abandoned fle-infested strays that we deal with. All it takes is one diseased dog in a kennel, and the entire dog population could become infected. Take your dog home sick from a private kennel and see how fast you'll run back to them for boarding services again—never! Private kennels are not the answer. Besides, they don't want our business.

We are a pet-oriented society. Sixty-one percent of every household in the U.S. has some kind of pet. Pets and their related businesses generate megabucks every year, and pets and their irresponsible owners create mega-problems for people like me, number one being abandonments and strays.

We must somehow, and soon, provide these animals with a shelter, and we have few options, the first being to build and maintain our own.

I feel very strongly that the towns in our area should pool their resources, their ideas, and their efforts and start thinking along the lines of developing and building a regional animal shelter.

Municipal funds and private donations together could accomplish this with relative ease. A regional shelter could provide the public with vaccination clinics, euthanasia services, educational materials, and a far-reaching adoption program.

We need your support. If you endorse this idea, let us know. If you wold like to participate in such a project, please contact us via mail, phone call, or a personal visit.

I almost forgot—if your dog is missing and presumed to be apprehended by the animal control officer, call my office before you do anything else. I'll let you know where your dog is being held. That's the way it is, folks, until we have our own shelter. The number, as always, is 749-5910.

Have you a question or comment for ACO Paul Murphy? You can drop him a line at the Mariner drop box at 13 Main St. or mail it to P.O. Box 290, Hingham 02043.

Murray's Memos . . .

By Mary Jeanette Murray

Have you ever had the experience of driving down the highway in your brand new automobile and suddenly it just died? After numerous attempts to have the problem corrected, the car still isn't right and you are frustrated, let alone mad.

This is exactly why a year ago we enacted the "Lemon Law", which was supposed to be the mechanism to help buyers of "lemons" get their money back or get a replacement. Unfortunately, the lemon law has turned out to be a real lemon.

When we drafted the legislation, we tried to cooperate with manufacturers to produce a law that would be fair and just. Manufacturers were quick to go along with the idea because they saw the loopholes. Our original intent to protect consumers turned out to be protection for the automobile manufacturers.

Besides the disregard many manufacturers had for the law, a weak arbitration process, low public awareness and poor enforcement caused the bill to turn sour. We plan to close some of these loopholes by changing several parts of the law.

First, the new legislation will make participation in the arbitration panel mandatory instead of voluntary for car manufacturers. It will also require the Secretary of Consumer Affairs to appoint all the members of the panel, not just half of them. The decision rendered by the panel will remain non-binding on the person who bought the car but binding on the maker.

To ensure that people know about the "Lemon Law", all manufacturers will be required to put a sticker on new cars next to the price. Dealers will be required to hand out information about the "Lemon Law" on yellow sheets of paper.

A person who has a lemon will also be allowed to choose whether they want a new car or a refund. Before, that decision was left to the manufacturer. If a manufacturer fails to comply, the Attorney General's office must go to court and ask for an injunction forbidding the manufacturer to sell any more cars in the state until the problem is resolved.

The responsibility is the manufacturers' not the dealers. In fact, auto dealers support the Lemon Law very strongly. The time has come, however, for the Lemon Law to serve its purpose, as it does in thirty-five other states—that is, protecting the consumer.

Bills have been filed to correct the flaws, and I shall be pushing for favorable action to remedy the problems.

A centennial celebration

publisher of the Mariner newspapers, and the chairmen of the Board of Selectmen and the Planning Board.

The contest will coincide with the high school's first study unit in local government next fall. Every student involved in that unit will be required to complete an essay during the term.

The original Memorial Award plaque is an interesting piece of history itself. It is made from the slice of found about 20 years ago in the First Parish Meeting House steeple. The two-foot wooden slab has Gilbert's handwriting inscribed on it, relating how he, at the age of 13, rang the steeple bells in honor of Admiral Dewey's victory at Manila in 1898. The original wood section, on which two photographs of Gilbert have been inlaid, will be presented to the Cohasset Historical Society February 15.

A replica of that wood piece with a brass plate attached, will be given to the high school. Each year, the essay winner's name will be inscribed upon the plaque.

As one Old Goats member stated, "the chief idea is for these young students to think about the future of their town, to think about planning. Do we really do planning in Cohasset or are we just concerned about zoning problems? It's something that Gilbert would like to see the young people involved in."

Almost 70 articles for TM

selling the property, or tearing down the structure.

There are three separate articles requesting an undetermined amount of money to pay outstanding legal fees. The town's battle against Cohasset Heights landfill has cost about $4247, although no money has ever been appropriated. There is also a request to appropriate about $4000 in legal fees for the town's continuing effort to fund an alternative wastewater system. The $8000 appropriated by Town Meeting in June has been depleted, although the town is in the midst of an appeal to the Environmental Protection Agency to gain funding for the project. The last legal funding request is to continue the town's collective bargaining efforts. Selectmen suggested that perhaps these money articles could be lumped together into one bonding issue.

Among the several other articles in the warrant are: to name the upper parking lot at Government Island in memory of Edwin A. Young; to appropriate funds to upgrade the town's computer system; to allow the Paul Pratt Library to enter into the Old Colony Library Network; to purchase a new diesel dump truck; to purchase a new lighting system for the high school auditorium; to approve nine separate zoning bylaw changes, sponsored by the Planning Board; and a possible pair of articles to appropriate $20,000 to design renovations to Milliken Field, and an unspecified amount to complete the work; and to appropriate an unspecified amount to purchase a sand filter for the present sewer plant.

In depth review of zoning by law changes

The board seeks to promote the responsible use of land in commercial zoned areas. "We want light industry and highway business," Bassett said, "but we don't want it to damage the unique quality of Cohasset."

"The proposed changes (in the commercial zoning by-laws) would give us the kind of balance we need," Bassett added.

Due to the idea held by many residents and board members that Rte. 3A acts as a kind of drive-through "showcase" for the town, the planning board has proposed several new changes in strip zoning by-laws.

Members of the planning board wish to buffer the lots which border residential districts with a greater amount of "green space." "We have to allow light industry and highway business to develop without infringing on the residential," Bassett explained.

The members recommend the green strip between light industry and residential zones to be no less than 30 feet wide. "Any industrial land which abuts residential land," Cotton said, "will be required to have a 30 foot buffer."

In addition to this buffer, commercial businesses must plan for another buffer which must border the access roadways. "Any street frontage on light industries or highway businesses must have a 20 foot wide green area that will not be built upon," Bassett said.

The fourth and final by-law change for commercial zones requires a minimum set back for construction of a building no less than 50 feet from the lot line of either a commercial or residential lot.

"Cohasset never had set backs or buffers before," Cotton said. "The motivation for these additions to the by-laws was to find a way to integrate light industry and highway business with residential areas," Bassett said. "The question is, how do you balance the two? Building in commercial areas cannot intrude upon residential communities." Planning board members believe these proposed changes will help to create a balance in the town between these two areas of growth.

A relatively new kind of development in Cohasset, clusters, have also prompted the planning board to revise zoning by-laws to better fit the reality and needs of the town. After seeing through the development of three major clusters in town, "we have a sense of what may be inappropriate" use of the land, Bassett said.

"The idea of a cluster is to take a large lot of land," Bassett explained, "and allow concentrated building on it."

The planning board proposes three significant changes which will effect the future look of cluster developments. The three areas of concern are land covered by impervious surface, land dedicated to open space, and marginal land which is either wetlands, flood plain, unsuitable for building, or on the high water table.

The planning board recommends that a maximum of 25 percent of the total land area be covered by impervious surface or anything man-made. This change is a decrease from 35 percent maximum.

At least 45 percent of all the land in a cluster development must be devoted to open space on which no structures or anything man-made be built. The present requirement for open space is 35 percent of the total land area.

In an additional proposal, no more than 25 percent of the 45 percent of open space may be counted as marginal land. A developer "can't count any more than 25 percent of the marsh, ledge, or open land as marginal," Bassett explained. Without this third change in the cluster by-law "there could be a greater possibility of more impervious surface," Bassett said, as the present by-law allows for up to 40 percent of the 45 percent of open space land to be called marginal.

Like the residential zones, the clusters come close in reality to the recommended changes. "What we're proposing is very very close to what's been happening with the three clusters," Bassett said. "but high density clusters are a possibility if no change occurs." "There could be a situation (in the future)," Cotton added, "where the present reading of the by-law, if followed precisely, would be disadvantageous."

Although the planning board recommends these changes in the cluster by-law, "the planning board is committed to the concept of cluster development," Bassett added, "as a viable way of using some of the land available to us in the town."

The last zoning by-law change recommended by the planning board requires a change in the definition of height . . . This definition follows close to the state building code's definition of height.

The maximum height allowed for a residential structure is 35 feet. In addition, Bassett said, "no part of a building can be higher than its horizontal distance to the nearest lot line." The concern is for the building of an appropriate structure for the particular lot size.

The addition to the by-law also "prevents someone from encroaching on another person's rights," Cotton said, by building a house which resembles a white elephant next door.

The board also intends to support the Water department in its quest for a building moratorium in the watershed protection district.

In addition to these actions, the planning board intends to study parking and loading requirements in the light industry and highway business areas. Recommendations from this study will be presented at town meeting in 1986.

"We don't have sufficient information to convince us to make dramatic changes at this time," Bassett said.

As part of their study members have already profiled some neighboring communities' parking and loading regulations to discover it these communities' regulations were working. "We found these towns weren't satisfied," Bassett said. "Thei. ·y-law wasn't working.

Although the boa. ·ants to take the time to do further research, Bassett added, "parking regulations for certain land sites are too stringent."

At town meeting this year, the planning board will "recommend it be able to hold up to 33 percent of the required parking spaces as a reserve during the site plan review process," Bassett said.

"This means that the required number of spaces be put on the plan, but not built on the site," Cotton explained. "A take-out food store may need all the spaces required," he added, because of the nature of the business. A jewelry store, however, will probably not need all the required parking spaces.

"The spaces are left in case we need them," Cotton said, for example, if the jewelry store changes hands and becomes a fast food restaurant.

The tremendous amount of growth in the South Shore area prompted members of the planning board to see further into the future of the town than the present by-laws can handle.

"Now is the time to plan for that growth," Bassett said. "The South Shore has always been protected from high density growth because of its poor roads and inaccessibility to Boston."

With the upshoot of several industrial parks over the last five years, this situation is quickly changing. "Industrial parks have already attracted technically oriented outfits," Cotton said, "which will put pressure on the residential areas in Cohasset." "With corporate development, we'll have corporate executives wanting to live in Cohasset," Bassett added.

"The land can only take so much," she said, "with the kind of land problems we have, we don't want to wake up 20 years from now and find everybody's basement, and possibly the first floor of their houses, flooded," Basset added.

"We have to try to forsee," Cotton said and preserve the quailty of Cohasset.

"We will be reacting to future problems," Bassett concluded, "unless we take the bull by the horns now."

Unique stage set for local play

The Cohasset Dramatic Club is preparing to present its winter show at the Cohasset Town Hall, marking the mid-point of the Club's 64th season of community theater. Performances will be given Friday and Saturday evenings March 1 and March 2 with an 8 p.m. curtain, and on Sunday afternoon, a matinee at 2 p.m.

For this presentation of Paul Osborn's popular "Morning's At Seven" a husband and wife team are combining their artistic talents as director and scene designer. Directing the show is Cohasset's Denise Ripley and designer of the unique stage setting is Sheldon Ripley. Together their association with the Cohasset Dramatic Club totals well more than half a century — both having begun their community theater activities with the Club in the 1950s.

Denise has directed and acted in numerous Town Hall shows, Sheldon has both acted in and designed stage settings for a significant number of the 90 or so productions staged by the Club in the same length of time.

Denny's most recent directing experience was the Club's 1982 presentation of the comedy "Strange Bedfellows," for which, incidentally, husband Sheldon was the set designer.

A graduate of Williams College and technical director for the professional company called "South Shore Players" which produced shows from the 1930s to the 1950s on Cohasset's Town Hall stage, Sheldon might be called the "dean" of Dramatic Club set designers, having such shows to his credit as "Remains To Be Seen" (1955); "Dial 'M' For Murder" (1957); "The Hasty Heart" (1958); "The Gazebo" (1965); "The Mousetrap" (1973); "Room Service" (1979) and others. Sheldon has observed that his own favorite was the set for the play "Dracula," designed for the Dramatic Club's 1964 winter show.

Always a meticulous planner of his stage settings, Sheldon frequently produces finely detailed watercolor sketches of his designs and builds miniature "mock-ups" or cardboard models of the stage set, specially adapted to Cohasset's Town Hall. Once the construction of the real set begins, he becomes chief carpenter, planner and consultant for each part of the project. Construction and painting of a stage set frequently becomes a weekend project extending over several Saturdays and Sundays. The finished product, completed in time for the rehearsals before performance, is a finely crafted work of art.

In the case of "Morning's At Seven" the setting is that of a backyard between two adjacent houses in a small midwestern town. Perhaps the accomplished design miracle in this production is the locating of both houses, complete with back porches, steps, screened doorways, picket fences, as well as usable yards along with their furniture, all within the limits of the Town Hall stage.

The finished product will be "home" for the play's two families and their acquaintances. This Cohasset production has as a cast: George Hamacher as Thor, Barbara Elliott as Arry, Wayne Miessner as Carl, Betty Miessner as Ida, Peter Tolman as Homer, Fran Cranford as Myrtle, Alice Duffy as Esther, Joe Coyle as Davis and Julia Wood Jordan taking the role of Cora.

Tickets for "Morning's At Seven" will be available at the door at times of performance or in advance at Fleming's, Cohasset Center.

Annual Report Of the Minister: Following, slightly abridged, is the minister's report submitted on January 27.

Before I began to write this report, I re-read the 46 issues of "Good News" mailed during 1984. As I read my way through 1984, I was impressed with the number of times and the variety of ways in which the church asks its members to give. The most obvious of the appeals to give, of course, were associated this year with the continuing Elevator Fund drive and the church's annual campaign for pledges to support its program. Beyond these appeals for funds, there were three special appeals to support the church's work in the world (including the recent Ethiopian Famine Relief appeal).

But it was not only money our church asked its members to give. Issue after issue of the "Good News" invited each of us to give our talents (singing, teaching, baking, sewing, selling, etc.) and our time to the work of the church. Week after week, the "Good News" requested our efforts on behalf of things as diverse as the Village Fair and Pine Street Inn; we were asked to give food (twice), clothing (twice), and coupons (once) in order to help others.

One other thing stood out for me as I re-read those pages from the past. Almost as often as our church said, "Please . . ." ("Please help. . .please give. . .please work. . .") it was able to say "Thank you. . ." The church's gratitude for the giving, and helping, and working of all its members, along with our gratitude to God for the gifts of life and grace, typified much of our church's "Good News" during the year.

Looking back on 1984 and ahead to 1985, I can safety predict there will be more of the same: more appeals for your gifts of time, talent and treasure, and more of the gratitude in which all of us share.

As your minister it has been my privilege to work with dozens of volunteers as they worked on projects ranging from serving coffee at a Fellowship Hour to initiating a major building renovation. Without exception, these volunteers have given of themselves joyfully and responsibly. Church School teachers, choir members, those who serve the church as officers and committee members — these, together with all who are voluntarily present in church or faithfully supportive in their prayers for the church's life, are the backbone of our church. Without such a backbone, the church would be not only "spineless," but also unable either to stand or to move. I am glad to be able to work with a congregation with the healthy backbone of its many volunteers, and to welcome new members and old to share in the volunteer efforts that keep the church standing and moving. Thank you!

Cohasset school sports news

By Lisa Shumaker

GIRLS BASKETBALL

Tuesday the girls squeaked past Duxbury, 49 to 48. With only five seconds left, Cohasset's Sara Seavey hit a pressure foul shot to clinch the victory for the Skippers. Coach Bill Fallon felt the key to the win was his team's great foul shooting in the stretch and their cool composure during critical points in the game.

Tra. . itzpatrick led all Cohasset scorers with 19 points and was a dominant force on both ends of the court. Carla Lucas and Sara Seavey followed Tracy in scoring with nine points apiece.

Friday the girls traveled to Norwell and knocked them off, 38 to 31. This victory placed the Skippers in a three-way tie for first place in the Small Schools Division. The Skippers won, according to Fallon, because of their outstanding baseline defense which limited Norwell's two top scorers to only 17 points all together.

Carla Lucas was Cohasset's high scorer with 12 points, and Tracy Fitzpatrick was next in line with seven points. Vicki Spooner, Tracy Fitzpatrick, Carla Lucas and Anne O'Leary all were exceptional off the boards, and together they outrebounded Norwell by a margin of two.

This week Cohasset faces Sandwich Monday. By winning this game, the Skippers would clinch first place in their division. Fallon feels that if his team is able to limit their mistakes, Cohasset will come out on top. Wednesday the Skippers will take on East Bridgewater who are always tough on the home court.

GYMNASTICS

Monday the girls traveled to Norwell and were defeated by a mere one point, 99.95 to 98.1. Coach Andrea Palardy was pleased with her team despite losing and felt this was a good meet for the Skippers, all things considered.

Jane deLima led Cohasset in all events placing first on the bars and second on the beam, the floor exercises and the vault. Julia Sechen was also impressive coming in third on the bars and the floor exercises.

Wednesday the girls beat Rockland in an exciting meet, 96.65 to 94. Palardy was happy with the victory and feels her team has shown steady improvement over the entire season.

Jane deLima had a remarkable day placing first in every event. Julia Sechen was the only other Skipper to place, coming in third on the bars.

Next week Cohasset has its last meet on Tuesday, followed by the league meet in Scituate at 6:30 on Thursday.

ICE HOCKEY

The boys had a difficult week, losing to Rockland, 8-4, Wednesday, and Duxbury, 3-1, Saturday. Coach Richard Izzo feels Wednesday's defeat was due mainly to tough breaks, while on Saturday, the boys played very well but unfortunately, were unable to hold onto their second period lead.

Against Rockland Jeff Hartwell, Alex Ghetto, Philip Mahoney and Troy Chatterton played well. Izzo also cited Philip as having a good game for the Skippers.

Saturday Jamie Roy was Cohasset's lone scorer against Duxbury. At the other end of the ice, goalie Peter Sandbloom turned in a good effort as well.

Coming up this week, the Skippers will take on Scituate Wednesday and Hull Saturday. Wednesday the boys play at 6 p.m. and Saturday at 4 p.m. Both games are at Cohasset Winter Gardens.

Extra Note:

Congratulations go out to Kristin Ellinger who on Monday surpassed the Junior High Girls Basketball scoring record by reaching 114 points. Kristin is now in the eighth grade and will undoubtedly be a dominant force in basketball in the years to come.

Boys Basketball

Tony Bogarty became the second player in CHS sports history to score over a 1,000 points as he recorded the mark four minutes into the second quarter Monday night.

The first player to reach the mark was John Sargent in 1972. Bogarty, a junior, is destined to be the all-time CHS leading scorer as he needs ten points to break the 1,011 mark set by Sargent.

CHS continued its undefeated 17-0 streak with three more wins last week. The Skippers defeated Sandwich, 72-56; Norwell, 74-58 and Duxbury, 68-62.

The Duxbury win wasn't as close as the score indicates as Cohasset built a 18 point lead with six minutes to go in the game. Coach Ed Minelli freely substituted and to Duxbury's credit cut the lead to two points with ten seconds to go in the game. Phil Bernstein's three point play sealed the win for the Skippers.

Bernstein, playing excellent defensive ball, scored seven points and grabbed seven rebounds. David MacDonald was the leading scorer with 18 points, followed by Bogarty's 17 points and Brian Edwards and Jim Creed with 12 points.

The Skippers beat Sandwich 72-56 as Minelli played his bench the entire second half. Eleven players scored and Edwards, nicely recovering from a neck injury, led the way with 24 points.

Creed was the all around start in the 74-48 win over Norwell as he scored 14 points, grabbed 15 rebounds and blocked seven shots. Bogarty scored 20 points and the offensive punch was added by David MacDonald who scored 14 points and by Edwards who chipped in with 12 points. Bernstein grabbed 11 rebounds in a fine defensive effort.

Selecting a nursing home

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray has obtained for her constituents in Cohasset, Hingham and Hull "A Guide to Selecting A Nursing Home." The booklet describes the Commonwealth's long term care ombudsman program under the Department of Elder Affairs.

"The decision to place a loved one into a nursing home is a difficult one to make. However, should it become necessary to place your relative into a nursing home, you need to make a careful and informed decision," Mary Jeanette stated.

"Most elders prefer to remain at home and independent. Should this be the case, the Department of Elder Affairs can readily provide you with information listing alternative forms of community-based Home Care services in your area." Rep. Murray continued.

Before considering placement in a nursing home you should explore the possibility of using alternative services. There are programs specifically designed to provide your loved ones with the needed services right in their own homes and community environments.

These kinds of community-based health support services and specialized living arrangements are being created throughoutthe state as an effective alternative to institutional care. Theaforementioned alternatives serve to delay or prevent the need for institutionalized care.

This booklet is designed to answer some of the questions you may have regarding nursing homes and what you can expect to find when you begin to look.

Representative Murray will send, upon request a guide to her interested constituents of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull. Call or write 722-2400, address Room 134 State House, Boston, MA 02133.

If you have other questions regarding nursing homes, please call the Long Term Ombudsman Division of the Department of Elder Affairs at (617) 727-7273.

Nostalgia

Oh, those Red Hot days!

By Dorothy Squier

February 12

Mama said, "If you want to remember something, write it down."

"Well, will you read it to me?" I asked.

"No, dear. It's better if you see it and write it. You'll remember it. You have a good memory."

"But I have to recite it by heart in school tomorrow."

She sighed. "Just do as I tell you and you'll know it. You may recite it to me when you're ready."

I sat at the kitchen table and wrote: "Four score and seven years ago our Fathers . . . " and soon had filled several pages of my lined copy book with the memorable words that President Lincoln had scribbled on the back of an envelope.

Mama heard me recite and had to prompt me only once when I came to". . . .of the people, by the people and for the people." Then she asked if I knew what a score meant and I said yes, it meant twenty, because our teacher had explained it to us, and that it was both a singular and a plural noun.

When Lincoln's Birthday arrived I wore a red dress to school, on which Mama had pinned a blue tin pin with the American flag on it. Most of the day was spent learning about Lincoln and what a great President he had been. The day closed with patriotic exercises and we didn't have any arithmetic or penmanship that day.

I was glad to be an American. To this day I can recite the "Gettysburg Address".

February 14

When we were in grammar school I didn't have any beaux. Neither did my friends and companions. But by the close of Valentine's Day we knew for sure that we had a few "secret admirers" too bashful to sign their names. We didn't exchange Valentines in school but as soon as we reached home they started to arrive in most mysterious ways. A knock on the back door or the ring of the front doorbell and a rush to the door . . . but no matter how fast you were the bearer had vanished.

They were so pretty! All red and white and lacey and flowery. Invariably they asked "Will You Be My Valentine?" and I took each one literally and pondered my answer. Some arrived even as late as nine o'clock, these from the more daring boys.

I never received a "funny" one but my sister Esther did. These were sheets of cheap paper with ugly cartoons and insulting messages. This one called her "four-eyes" and she just laughed and said it was from her boy friend, Bill. I didn't understand it because no one in our family wore eyeglasses except Mama. She needed them because she was a seamstress and spent hours at her White sewing machine.

The most romantic Valentine we ever received was when the local florist's boy arrived with a red heart-shaped box for my oldest sister, Liz. Under a sheet of thin green waxed paper lay a fragrant bunch of dewy fresh violets like purple velvet, with a red rosebud tucked in the center. I never knew who sent it but she was awfully pretty and had lots of beaux. She wore it pinned to her shoulder that night when she went off to a Valentine Dance. The next morning I saw them in the ice box wrapped in wet newspaper.

Esther and I were sent to bed of course and I dreamed of hearts and violets and boys begging for kisses. What a dreamer!

February 22

Ah, this was a Holiday! No school, flags flying, parades and band music. One of these Holidays stands out because of the weather, although it had little to do with George Washington. It was a glorious spring-like day, believable only when you thought it was getting close enough to March and the sun was getting higher. What little snow left had melted between the red bricks of the sidewalks.

This was the day of the Lilla Viles Wyman Dance Festival at Mechanics Building Hall out on Huntington Avenue in Boston, near Symphony. It was an afternoon performance and I had been invited by my dance teacher.

Joyful and excited, I was discussing what to wear with Mama. She said my dark blue velvet would be just right and she'd baste on the clean white lace collar. But then came the question of the long drawers. Oh, Mama, please, I thought. I wanted to wear my blue socks and patent leather Mary Janes.

"Good heavens, no!" Mama said. "It's still winter. You'll catch your death. I never heard of such a thing."

"But Mama, it's warm out. Honest! And the sun is shining. Come out on the back piazza and feel it."

I pulled at her hand and she followed me. It was true. We didn't have a thermometer but it felt like spring to me. She looked about and her eyes smiled. I had won.

I watched the recital with awe and wonder as one of my schoolmates danced on roller-skates! Others toe-danced in pink satin slippers tied with ribbons. I was in a trance.

It was a "Red hot" Red Letter Day.

Cohasset school sports news

By Lisa Shumaker

GIRLS BASKETBALL

Tuesday the girls squeaked past Duxbury, 49 to 48. With only five seconds left, Cohasset's Sara Seavey hit a pressure foul shot to clinch the victory for the Skippers. Coach Bill Fallon felt the key to the win was his team's great foul shooting in the stretch and their cool composure during critical points in the game.

Tra.. Fitzpatrick led all Cohasset scorers with 19 points and was a dominant force on both ends of the court. Carla Lucas and Sara Seavey followed Tracy in scoring with nine points apiece.

Friday the girls traveled to Norwell and knocked them off, 38 to 31. This victory placed the Skippers in a three-way tie for first place in the Small Schools Division. The Skippers won, according to Fallon, because of their outstanding baseline defense which limited Norwell's two top scorers to only 17 points all together.

Carla Lucas was Cohasset's high scorer with 12 points, and Tracy Fitzpatrick was next in line with seven points. Vicki Spooner, Tracy Fitzpatrick, Carla Lucas and Anne O'Leary all were exceptional off the boards, and together they outrebounded Norwell by a margin of two.

This week Cohasset faces Sandwich Monday. By winning this game, the Skippers would clinch first place in their division. Fallon feels that if his team is able to limit their mistakes, Cohasset will come out on top. Wednesday the Skippers will take on East Bridgewater who are always tough on the home court.

GYMNASTICS

Monday the girls traveled to Norwell and were defeated by a mere one point, 99.95 to 98.1. Coach Andrea Palardy was pleased with her team despite losing and felt this was a good meet for the Skippers, all things considered.

Jane deLima led Cohasset in all events placing first on the bars and second on the beam, the floor exercises and the vault. Julia Sechen was also impressive coming in third on the bars and the floor exercises.

Wednesday the girls beat Rockland in an exciting meet, 96.65 to 94. Palardy was happy with the victory and feels her team has shown steady improvement over the entire season.

Jane deLima had a remarkable day placing first in every event. Julia Sechen was the only other Skipper to place, coming in third on the bars.

Next week Cohasset has its last meet on Tuesday, followed by the league meet in Scituate at 6:30 on Thursday.

ICE HOCKEY

The boys had a difficult week, losing to Rockland, 8-4, Wednesday, and Duxbury, 3-1, Saturday. Coach Richard Izzo feels Wednesday's defeat was due mainly to tough breaks, while on Saturday, the boys played very well but unfortunately, were unable to hold onto their second period lead.

Against Rockland Jeff Hartwell, Alex Ghetto, Philip Mahoney and Troy Chatterton played well. Izzo also cited Philip as having a good game for the Skippers.

Saturday Jamie Roy was Cohasset's lone scorer against Duxbury. At the other end of the ice, goalie Peter Sandbloom turned in a good effort as well.

Coming up this week, the Skippers will take on Scituate Wednesday and Hull Saturday. Wednesday the boys play at 6 p.m. and Saturday at 4 p.m. Both games are at Cohasset Winter Gardens.

Extra Note:

Congratulations go out to Kristin Ellinger who on Monday surpassed the Junior High Girls Basketball scoring record by reaching 114 points. Kristin is now in the eighth grade and will undoubtedly be a dominant force in basketball in the years to come.

Boys Basketball

Tony Bogarty became the second player in CHS sports history to score over a 1,000 points as he recorded the mark four minutes into the second quarter Monday night.

The first player to reach the mark was John Sargent in 1972. Bogarty, a junior, is destined to be the all-time CHS leading scorer as he needs ten points to break the 1,011 mark set by Sargent.

CHS continued its undefeated 17-0 streak with three more wins last week. The Skippers defeated Sandwich, 72-56; Norwell, 74-58 and Duxbury, 68-62.

The Duxbury win wasn't as close as the score indicates as Cohasset built a 18 point lead with six minutes to go in the game. Coach Ed Minelli freely substituted and to Duxbury's credit cut the lead to two points with ten seconds to go in the game. Phil Bernstein's three point play sealed the win for the Skippers.

Bernstein, playing excellent defensive ball, scored seven points and grabbed seven rebounds. David MacDonald was the leading scorer with 18 points, followed by Bogarty's 17 points and Brian Edwards and Jim Creed with 12 points.

The Skippers beat Sandwich 72-56 as Minelli played his bench the entire second half. Eleven players scored and Edwards, nicely recovering from a neck injury, led the way with 24 points.

Creed was the all around start in the 74-48 win over Norwell as he scored 14 points, grabbed 15 rebounds and blocked seven shots. Bogarty scored 20 points and the offensive punch was added by David MacDonald who scored 14 points and by Edwards who chipped in with 12 points. Bernstein grabbed 11 rebounds in a fine defensive effort.

Selecting a nursing home

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray has obtained for her constituents in Cohasset, Hingham and Hull "A Guide to Selecting A Nursing Home." The booklet describes the Commonwealth's long term care ombudsman program under the Department of Elder Affairs.

"The decision to place a loved one into a nursing home is a difficult one to make. However, should it become necessary to place your relative into a nursing home. you need to make a careful and informed decision," Mary Jeanette stated.

"Most elders prefer to remain at home and independent. Should this be the case, the Department of Elder Affairs can readily provide you with information listing alternative forms of community-based Home Care services in your area." Rep. Murray continued.

Before considering placement in a nursing home you should explore the possibility of using alternative services. There are programs specifically designed to provide your loved ones with the needed services right in their own homes and community environments.

'Morning's at Seven' set for March 1-2

The Cohasset Dramatic Club is preparing to present its winter show at the Cohasset Town Hall, marking the mid-point of the Club's 64th season of community theater. Performances will be given Friday and Saturday evenings March 1 and March 2 with an 8 p.m. curtain, and on Sunday afternoon, a matinee at 2 p.m.

For this presentation of Paul Osborn's popular "Morning's At Seven" a husband and wife team are combining their artistic talents as director and scene designer. Directing the show is Cohasset's Denise Ripley and designer of the unique stage setting is Sheldon Ripley. Together their association with the Cohasset Dramatic Club totals well more than half a century — both having begun their community theater activities with the Club in the 1950s.

Denise has directed and acted in numerous Town Hall shows, Sheldon has both acted in and designed stage settings for a significant number of the 90 or so productions staged by the Club in the same length of time.

Denny's most recent directing experience was the Club's 1982 presentation of the comedy "Strange Bedfellows," for which, incidentally, husband Sheldon was the set designer.

Always a meticulous planner of his stage settings, Sheldon frequently produces finely detailed watercolor sketches of his designs and builds miniature "mock-ups" or cardboard models of the stage set, specially adapted to Cohasset's Town Hall.

In the case of "Morning's At Seven" the setting is that of a backyard between two adjacent houses in a small midwestern town.

Tickets for "Morning's At Seven" will be available at the door at times of performance or in advance at Fleming's, Cohasset Center.

Juried art show winners

Hingham artist Wilfred Loring took Best of Show in the South Shore Art Center's All New England Juried Show.

Running through Feb. 28 at the Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset, the juried exhibit represents a good cross section of works in all media.

A total of 230 works were entered in the 1985 show with 65 being selected for the exhibit.

First prize and honorable mentions were given in categories of oil and acrylic, watercolor, pastel and drawing, photography, mixed media and 3-D.

The exhibit is open to the public Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m. and Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. For further information, call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

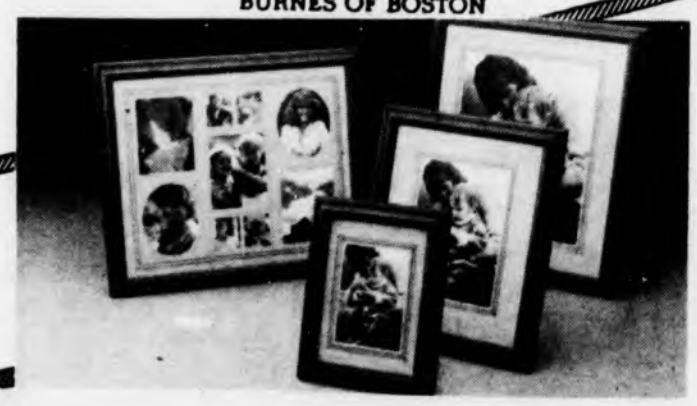
Boston Ballet to perform March 3

The Boston Ballet Ensemble will perform three one-act ballets at Hingham High School auditorium Sunday, March 3. The performance is particularly suitable for families and children.

Sponsored by the Rosenberger Arts Fund, the 2 p.m. production will feature Sans Souci, Spring Rain and Big Top. Between acts, audience members may ask questions of Ensemble dancers and learn more about the life of a professional dancer. During intermission a raffle will be held offering several items, including a gift certificate for Boston Ballet tickets.

Proceeds from the afternoon will replenish the Rosenberger Arts Fund established three years ago to provide a financial base for cultural and arts enrichment programs for Foster Elementary School children in Hingham.

Tickets are $5 and are available at Foster School, Hingham Square Bookshop and Hingham Public Library.



The single performance is expected to be sold out. It is advised that tickets be purchased early.

Murray appointments

Mary Jeanette Murray was appointed Ranking Republican on two committees, "Local Affairs and Counties". She will be entering her ninth year of membership on each of these committees.

Mary Jeanette in the past session was very effective on these committees plus "Taxation" which deals with all tax matters. "Local Affairs", she strongly believes in because of her stance on home rules and "Counties", a committee which if proposed legislation is implemented can be cost saving to communities. In this 1985 legislative year, Mary Jeanette will continue to use her expertise on these three important committees.

Rep. Murray was also re-elected unanimously by the Republican Caucus to be their clerk. These meetings pertain to important issues and major bills and legislation. After these matters are researched and discussed determinations are resolved as to the Republicans taking a stand.

Fishermen invited to meeting

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R) Third Plymouth District announced there will be a public meeting Tuesday, Feb. 19 from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. at the Visitors Center, Wompatuck State Park in Hingham.

Due to substantial increases in the fishing effort in state waters, all fishermen are asked to attend this meeting and participate in the proceedings.

The Massachusetts Marine Fisheries Advisory Commission and the Division of Marine Fisheries will hold a series of these meetings starting with this one in Hingham.

Rep. Murray said, "I hope all of our lobstermen and other fishermen, will attend this important meeting to discuss the increasing number of gear conflicts."

State census forms mailed

State census forms have been mailed to the residents Thursday. Residents are asked to fill out the forms and return as soon as possible.

This form is also being used for the Town Census. If any resident hasn't received a form or has any questions regarding the form please call the town clerk's office for assistance 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday, Thursday evening 5:30 to 8 p.m. and Friday 8:30 to 1 p.m.

Donor groups included Norfolk Conveyor, six; Seavey Eng., five; St. Stephen, nine; Second Congregational Church, nine; First Parish, four; Beechwood Congregational, two; St. Anthony, 27; Rotary, three; School Department, two, and Legion, Masons, Firefighters, South Shore Elder Services and independents a total of 15.

Donor promoter Alfred Odermatt wishes to thank all those volunteers (25) who assisted in the signing up of donors.

Chairman Cahill estimated that it requires an approximate total of 225 volunteer hours to conduct each of the community bloodmoblies held three times a year.

Vacation workshop

The South Shore Art Center's popular children's vacation drop-in art workshop is being expanded to two locations through the generosity of four grants.

The Harold Brooks Foundation, a charitable foundation trust, issued through the South Shore Bank, plus Hingham, Norwell, and Hull Arts Lottery Councils (funds pending State Arts Lottery approval) have elected to fund the Center's vacation drop-in program designed to let children explore various art techniques and experiment with their artistic creativity. The drop-in which originally was only at the Center's main location at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset will now also be offered in Hingham at the Community Center, 70 South St.

The vacation drop-in is so named as it allows children, during the February and April vacations, to leisurely drop in on a daily basis and work on art projects. No pre-registration is required allowing the children to come spontaneously.

Major support for the expanded program comes from the Harold Brooks Foundation. Mr. Robert Dwyer, Senior Vice President of South Shore Bank, stated that "South Shore Art Center's request was in accord with the trustees feelings that a very worthy South Shore project such as this (drop-in program) would greatly enrich the lives of local children."

The Harold Brooks Foundation Trust became a charitable foundation in 1984 directed to distribute its net income to a broad range of non-profit organizations within the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. South Shore Art Center was one of a few selected non-profit organizations chosen to receive initial funding. Without this support, and Arts Lottery Council Funds (pending), the South Shore Art Center would not be able to offer its drop in to as many youngsters. In the past there has been an attendance of 250 at the Center's drop-in workshops during the various vacations.

The popularity of this program and the reputation of the South Shore Art Center made the choice for the Norwell Arts Lottery Council "a natural thing for us to support", according to Mary Lizzotte, chairperson of the Norwell Arts Council. The major thrust of the council is the support of the arts and the drop-in allows "us an opportunity to support a program which reaches a young audience offering hands on instruction in different artistic techniques."

The youngsters, ages seven to twelve, work with painting, drawing, collage, clay, mixed media, film as inspiration for creative projects and printmaking. The staff of the Center's young artist department teach the program. Familiar faces around the Center, Serena Brundige, Gil Coyle, Lisbeth Koopman-Wyman and Syma will be working with the children. These instructors, professionals in their respective artistic fields, bring to the class a depth of knowledge and expertise that will give the students a good foundation in working with the various art techniques.

It's a rare opportunity to have children exposed to such a creative environment on a daily basis. The vacation drop in is scheduled for the February vacation, Feb. 19-22 and again for the April vacation, April 16-19 from 10:30 to noon.

Bloodmobile success

Cohasset Community Red Cross Blood Chairman Corinne Cahill wishes to thank all those who volunteered their services or donated blood, and the Red Cross staff for their participation in the Bloodmobile held Monday, January 28, at the First Parish House.

Despite the epidemic of colds that kept many promised donors away, 82 people showed and donated 73 pints of blood.

Boosters banquets

The Cohasset Boosters Winter Sports banquet will be held on March 10 at 5 p.m. in the high school cafeteria.

It will be a pizza party. The athletes will be our guests and their parents will be charged $3 each to cover expenses. For further information contact Martha Gjestby at 383-1614.

The Cohasset Booster Club still has clothing and other articles available. Our new towels have arrived. They are $8.50 and may be obtained from Ruth Nedrow at 383-9292.

Young Plympton man seeks new trial in murder case

By Frank Mann
(Special to the Mariner Newspapers)

It is beginning again for Donald P. Saarela, a young Plympton man convicted of murder in 1977.

Once again he is about to ride the emotional roller coaster of the legal system, seeking an exit ramp out of the correctional system, and a way back into the life that ended for him 10 years ago.

Donnie, as his mother still calls him, was just 15 years old when, on the day after Christmas 1975, he was arrested for the murder of Robert G. Holt, 52, of Parsonage Road in Plympton.

On November 22 of that year Holt was cutting wood with a chain saw in an area located approximately 100 yards behind his home when he was shot three times in the head and chest with a 22 caliber rifle.

Though two witnesses at the scene spoke of someone running off into the woods upon their arrival, and Holt had bled profusely from a wound to the head, the medical examiner called to the scene suggested that Holt had died of a heart-attack.

It was only at the funeral home that night that the bullet holes were discovered and the police notified; the investigation of the crime scene did not take place until almost 24 hours after the time of death.

The complexities of the case and the eventual conviction of the young boy are confounding. Probable cause and Grand Jury hearings preceded the trial.

His mother, brother and sister testified Donald Saarela was at home with them at the time of the murder.

Yet the 15 year old was convicted.

Since his arrest, Saarela has been a ward of the state, passed from lawyer to lawyer, through several appeals, several correctional institutions, including Walpole. He even spent 20 months of freedom while an attorney argued for a new trial, only to be sent back to prison with his parole date moved back to make up for the time he was free awaiting the trial.

Now, unexpectedly, famed trial lawyer P.J. Piscitelli has taken an interest in the case and is expected to be retained by the family this week in another try for a new trial for Saarela.

Piscitelli has been involved in several important cases in the past, including the recent trial and acquittal of Plympton resident Anne Capute, who was accused of disconnecting the life-support system of a patients under her care.

Piscitelli's reputation was known to the inmates at the Soputheastern Correctional Insititue in Bridgewater, where Saarela has been since 1979, and when his horoscope suggested that the time was right, Don Saarela wrote directly to the Brockton lawyer.

"I had to do something to get the case going again," Saarela said, during an interview conducted this past week in Bridgewater, "everyone said Piscitelli was the best, and my horoscope kept saying things like 'now is the time to get things started, get going', so I wrote him."

Saarela's letter left the prison on a Saturday, and that next Tuesday, P.J. Piscitelli paid a visit at the prison.

"Everyone knows who he is," Saarela said with a shy smile, "after his visit that's all they could talk about."

Around him in the visiting room couples groped and clutched, kissing passionately, or talking quietly, their heads bowed.

In contrast Saarela, with his mother facing him across the table, seemed almost relaxed. Though not yet 25, Saarela has seen the insides of three institutions since his first arrest 10 years ago and is really a veteran of prison life.

"After Piscitelli left I was really excited, but then I realized that it takes more than a good lawyer, it takes a lot of money to get a new trial. I really thought that it would take years to raise what we needed. I couldn't believe it when I heard how quickly the money was coming in," Saarela said.

"The prices of everything amaze me," Saarela said, "before I went to Walpole gas was something like 50 cents a gallon, and the people across the street were selling house lots for $6,000."

Less than two weeks after Piscitelli's visit friends of Saarela informed him that they had raised in excess of $10,000, to be used toward his defense.

The Saarela fimily has already mortgaged their home, spent their life savings and cashed in their insurance policies, spending in excess of $40,000 in their effort to free their son.

Former newspaper owner Daniel Sapir of Kingston, who had contacted Piscitelli about the case a year earlier, and who has been interested in the Saarela case since the beginning, spearheaded the fundraising efforts after learning of Saarela's letter.

With individual contributions ranging from $25 to $2000 dollars, Sapir said he has made a good start toward his goal of providing the Saarelas with enough money "to do this thing right, from beginning to end."

To date contributions have come in from Weymouth, Norwell, Marshfield, Quincy, Hingham, Pembroke and Hanover.

Not that every effort has not been made in the past 10 years by his family; but those efforts too often resulted in debts without corresponding successes.

"We hired a detective a few years ago, and never knew what he was up to," Marion Saarela, Donald's mother said this past week, "then the man dies of a heart attack and his office says they can't find any of his notes on the case, nothing."

The Saarelas have a copy of a letter from their first attorney, Henry Quarles of Boston, explaining how all relevant files on the case were lost during a move.

Despite all the difficulties a new trial had been granted in 1981 by then Plymouth County District Attorney Henry Chmielinski, after Saarela's attorney George Burke of Quincy filed a motion stating that he had "substantial new evidence that casts doubt on the guilt of the defendant."

That trial never took place though, as Chmielinski was defeated in his bid for re-election to the D.A.'s seat, then died of cancer, and newly elected Plymouth County D.A. William C. O'Malley successfully appealed his predecessors earlier ruling granting the new trial.

Saarela's attorney was instructed to re-file his motion for a new trial, addressing certain legal aspects, but Burke never took any further action.

Still the Saareal family remains confident that their latest efforts will prove successful.

"We know Donnie is innocent, we just want the chance to prove it," Marion Saarela said this past Saturday."

Scituate man pedals across North America

by Lisa J. Messersmith

Captured in the still life pose of a photograph, cyclist Mark Ramsden appears to be everything he is not — silent, reserved, even rather serious.

But captured in a lengthy interview, Ramsden exudes a zany energy, exuberant laughter, and a deep self-confidence in his intellect.

Yes, one can believe without actually seeing — Ramsden cycled 11,000 miles alone across the U.S. into Canada and down through Mexico in 14 months. No problem.

At once Ramsden is the easiest and most difficult person to interview. Most of the time I could not pin him down to answer a question directly. Instead, he wandered through his memory recounting adventures or through the maze of his mind declaring philosophy.

In fact, he never got around to telling his exact route of passage. It did not seem to matter at all. Nor did he feel compelled to give chronological framework to his journey other than when he left Scituate Ma. and when he returned, interspersed with only vague references to time.

His recount of the trip possessed no perceivable order, and I was guided along a route of impression, adventure, and unique wholeness, as much through the world of a poet as through that of a cyclist.

On August 9, 1983, Ramsden now 21, and a friend bid adieu to Scituate. "I left on the spur of the moment," Ramsden said. "I was bored, my parents wanted me out of the house, and I believed there was more to life than what Scituate had to offer."

Seven days after leaving Scituate, they were 20 miles south of Buffalo, N.Y. Although their general goal was to reach the Pacific Northwest in a month, Ramsden said, "we didn't know where we were going."

In Buffalo, Ramsden and his friend split up. The friend went home via Greyhound and Ramsden decided to go it alone. There was never a thought in his mind of going home.

"I was doing it for my merit badge . . . to come back and impress everybody," he said. "It was not intended to enjoy it for its own sake." His attitude soon changed.

"I wised up after a while," Ramsden said. Around the middle of September, he began to revise his plans. "It became less of a hurry-up thing."

His journey becomes a stream of perceptions and early in the trip his senses are challenged. Much of the time he traveled at night because of the searing 100 degree weather during the day.

One particular night he remembers biking 200 miles in western Ohio on an abandoned highway, "paved with two washed out bridges." No moon shone in the sky and Ramsden felt he was "traveling without sensory perceptions . . . like a trance."

From St. Louis, Missouri, Ramsden biked in a "staircase" movement through the West up into Montana and Vancouver, British Columbia.

Transportation conundrum, part II

By David A. Mittell, Jr.

Last week we saw that there once was a rail network extending to nearly every Southeastern Massachusetts community, but that with the construction of a new Rte. 3 in the 1950s, rail passenger service became temporarily obsolete, and was abandoned on June 30, 1959.

For several years thereafter the resumption of service would have required nothing more than a relatively modest public subsidy. Beginning in 1966, however, rapid transit service was constructed through Quincy and Braintree. This construction was done in such a way as to terribly complicate the today terribly necessary resumption of a commuter rail service. To understand how this is so is to understand the critical predicament transportation planners (most of whom do not understand it themselves) confront in 1985. Here's what happened.

For the first few years after service was discontinued in 1959, the chief concern was the city of Quincy, the largest community in the region and one that had been heavily dependent on the Old Colony Railroad. Both the Commonwealth and the City of Boston wanted to make Quincy part of the then Metropolitan Transit Authority (Charlie's old M.T.A.) and extend rapid transit to Quincy over the Old Colony right of way.

Quincy was dead-set against this due to the fact that communities in the M.T.A. were assessed for service based on the number of passengers boarding the system in each community. Quincy foresaw Marshfielders, Pembrokers, etc. driving to Quincy to board trains, each adding to Quincy's property tax.

In 1964 under Gov. Peabody a compromise was reached. The 14-community M.T.A. was expanded to a 76-community M.B.T.A. with the stipulation that any new station to be built would not subject the host community to a direct assessment. The new communities were to be assessed, but on a complex formula not directly linked to the number of boarding passengers. (For the first few years, M.B.T.A. assessments to its new members were laughable—in the hundreds of dollars per year; in the 1970s they were to turn quite serious).

With the creation of the M.B.T.A. came a plan to restore rail service to Quincy. Quincy was linked to the Cambridge-Dorchester rapid transit line—rechristened the "Red Line." Service to Quincy opened on September 1, 1971, and has contributed importantly to—perhaps even created—a major economic revival in Quincy.

But, and it is the "but" on which the rest of Southeastern Massachusetts now founders, the construction of the Red Line obliterated the rail right-of-way which was the "trunk," and unfortunately the only trunk, through which every single rail line that used to serve the South Shore and Cape Cod had to pass on the way to Boston. Lines that once ran to Hull, to Greenbush, to Hanover, to Plymouth, to East Bridgewater, and through Brockton and Middleboro to Wood's Hole and Provincetown—each and every one of them converged in Braintree and proceeded through Quincy and Dorchester to South Station.

It may be asked: couldn't restored commuter rail service simply terminate in Braintree and its clientele transer to the Red Line? No, because for the average, rational commuter, that would take too long.

Think of it this way. You board a train in, say, Plymouth. Your train stops in Kingston, Plympton, Halifax, Hanson, East Bridgewater, Whitman, Abington, South Weymouth, East Braintree, Braintree and . . . and then you have to get out in the cold and transfer to the Red Line . . . and it's nine more slow stops to Park Street for a total of 19 plus two "waits" . . . and that doesn't include switching to the Green Line!

Such a commuter will deal with the Expressway, you can bet on it.

It may also be asked: couldn't the Red Line be extended past Braintree along the various rail rights of way? No, for three reasons. First, constructing electrified high-platform rapid transit to the numerous towns that need transportation relief would be prohibitively expensive. Second, the Red Line is overburdened as it is; it could not accommodate major numbers of passengers from towns south of Braintree. Third and foremost, the same "you get too many stops" syndrome that would apply if commuter rail service terminated in Braintree would also apply if rapid transit were extended beyond Braintree. If, for example, the Red Line ran to Plymouth, there would be the same (at minimum) 19 stops to Park St. Such a commute would take much too long, and those who could, i.e. most folks, would continue to use Rte. 3.

For commuter rail service to work, that is to say to relieve congestion on Route 3 in a major way, there need to be two rail systems operating simultaneously and, between Braintree and Boston, side-by-side. The inner suburbs to Rte. 128 are well served by rapid transit such as the Red Line. But the outer suburbs and more distant points (such as the Cape) are better served by conventional commuter rail.

Here is the key: Commuter rail draws its clientele from the communities outside Rte. 128. A typical train would make eight-to-ten local stops in such outer suburban communities. Then, as it reaches Braintree and the terminus of the Red Line, it would make a next-to-last stop where passengers would have the option of changing to the Red Line for connections to intermediate points such as Quincy and U-Mass Boston. Then, and this is the crux of the matter, the commuter rail system should by-pass the Red Line and express directly to South Station. Only by bypassing the Red Line could commuter rail be speedy enough to draw large numbers of outer suburban passengers who now clog the Expressway.

How does the Red Line stand in the way of such a plan? Such a plan would require four sets of rails from Braintree through Quincy and Dorchester to South Station—inbound and outbound on the Red Line, and inbound and outbound on the commuter rail system. But when the Red Line was built—and this is the crux of the rail component of our transportation conundrum—the previous four-track right of way was narrowed to a width of only three sets of rails. To widen it today, especially through Quincy where it has also been depressed, would be enormously costly.

Could a commuter rail system function using a single track in the approximately nine miles between Braintree and Boston? Not if it were to handle the volume required to provide major relief of congestion on Route 3. And make no mistake: both our quality of life and our economic future depend on the relief of congestion on Rte. 3. It is the single greatest public policy imperative our region confronts.

The pity is that the rail system that could answer our present dilemna was in place a generation ago. Today abandoned lines lie like so many eskers throughout our beautiful region. But today, due to some bad decisions 10 and 20 years ago, the restoration of the railroad would be enormously costly; tomorrow colossally so.

The question is: what is the alternative? The alternative is a better road, and next week we will see how costly that would be.

Stutman: Drug Enforcement Agent at large

By Lois Martin

"I'll tell you the kind of people we deal with," he says, "When we went after Bobby Sullivan, and they said we'd never get him, he was asleep at his mother's house, upstairs in a single bed, fast asleep in his pajamas.

"I had my gun drawn and I tapped him on the shoulder to wake him up. This guy wakes up, looks up, sees me with a gun on him and says, 'You know Stutman, you look heavier on TV.' No nerves or emotion. That's what you deal with at the top level."

And the men in drug trafficking at the top level have to deal with the man quoted above, Robert Stutman, special agent in charge of the Federal Drug Enforcement Agency's New England territory.

If his quarry seems nerveless, Stutman seems to operate on a lot of nerves, high-powered nerve. He's a snappy operator. He uses a long telephone cord that allows him to continue his pacing while handling phone decisions.

Of the agents in the nine New England offices, it is Stutman, their chief who handles what is tantamount to public relations work. He has the say so and he says 'so' as spokesman for the department.

And he's an expert on drug use in town. It is not comforting to know this area is a familiar, a household word, to the chieftain of New England's drug enforcement agency.

But that's the way it is. Want to know what drugs are being used, by whom, where it's coming from, where it's been cut off and how it's still getting in? Ask Stutman. He can tell you all about our drug problem.

Stutman has as much subtlety as a cactus. What you see is what you get, sharp terms and understandable ones. He operates behind no facade of cool disinterest. You have his full attention and he has that of big guys in the drug world.

There is no way Bob Stutman lives as the rest of us do. He sits with his back to the wall, de rigeur. He goes somewhere, he assumes he's known. He's ready. He is almost visibly on the balls of his feet. "I've made a lot of people angry," he said. The thing is, those whom he has angered play by no rules. Stutman has to catch 'em, dismantle their drug operation by a lot of rules. He is, therefore, a household word among those whom he's trying to shut down.

He's a Rhode Island native. He left that state shortly after his graduation from Providence College, where he majored in economics but changed courses after being recruited by the CIA. He stayed with the branch for eight to 10 months before scanning other options, like the FBI, Secret Service and narcotics.

"I chose narcotics," he says. "I believe drug enforcement is the most difficult form of law enforcement. We are our own complainers. You need tremendous ingenuity. And it's probably the most dangerous."

There was a time no agency like DEA existed. In 1965 there were only 275 agents in the world. Now there are 2350. Stutman has been around to be part of the rise of the DEA and to contribute to that increase in the dynamics of drug control.

He was an undercover man mostly in D.C. until '72.

That he terms as 'fun, exciting,' He'd been a hippie, a derelict, a gangster. The goal was to get the drug dealers to sell him their goods.

But in '72 the DEA implemented international training with police officers overseas. "The more dope that was stopped there, the less over here."

His office shows semblances of those years when he traveled internationally, 70 countries, three million miles. He still has correspondence with friends from some of those countries. And his office testifies to his assimilation of the accouterments of Egyptian and Far Eastern cultures.

That office is a paradox of sorts. His stereo is putting out Stevie Wonder's "I just called to say I love you," in its post beyond the American flag that's behind his desk. That's while the boss man is barking to passing agents, scanning their yellow legal pads outlining cases and giving a telephone synopsis of a witness who wasn't giving the agent what he wanted for information.

The foreign training stint gave way to Stutman's new role in '76 as head of the Office of Congressional Affairs. He was an expert for Congress on drugs. And he was to help turn around public opinion to a more positive view.

But it's 'the field' Stutman likes best and when the top spot in New England opened up, he was ready to make the move back to the area.

He credits the agents in his realm as having done "spectacular things in the past four years."

The recent interplay with Gov. Michael Dukakis is part of Stutman's plan of awareness that is intended to reduce use of illegal drugs. "Our primary function is enforcement. We strongly believe in enforcement. It makes drugs much less available. We will never completely wipe it out. You can only do that in a police state."

Within the early 80's Stutman says his agents have "decimated" the major drug organizers in the area.

But his personal focus also includes presence of drugs in the youth groups. He says schools which do not deal with the issue of kids and drugs, either don't know the prevalence or pretend drugs aren't there. "That makes as much sense," he says, "as ignoring the fact that 20 percent of the school population has tuberculosis . . . Drugs among kids is a communicable disease."

Stutman believes the Dukakis administration counts the drug problem high among its priorities. The majority of high school kids at graduation have used illegal drugs, that's about 50 to 60 percent. There are, by his information, four million regular users of cocaine among adults and 20 million adults who use marijuana.

Supplies of marijuana and cocaine come in from Columbia. Heroin's from the middle east and the USA produces its own storehouses of drugs like LSD. A recent study by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company shows use is highest in the Northeast and is used mostly by the higher economic strata of youth.

The name 'Bobby Sullivan' wrought havoc in the area of drugs. There were those, said the man who arrested him,

FROM THE GARDEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

February is a capricious month, the last of the winter months according to the calendar, but when snow plows rumble along our country roads as they did last week, it's hard to believe that spring is due next month. And yet, temperatures that were colder than those of December, haven't halted the willows from turning to amber, nor discouraged birds at the feeder from pausing for a fragment of song. That welcome interlude—the January thaw—never came our way, but rivers and harbors clogged with ice, are a haven for a magnificant array of ducks. Pewter skies fail to discourage flocks of robins from emerging from their hideaway deep in the woods and they have been spotted feeding on berries on bushes bordering Summer and River Sts. in Norwell.

Daylight hours now equal those of last October and when the sun does shine through, I can tell that the rays coming through our big window facing south, are much warmer. Even so, it's important to keep tender African violets, begonias and other warm climate plants away from drafty windows. For a touch of warmth, I remove them from the windowsill late in the afternoon, placing them under the table lamp. Also, at this time of year, be careful about over-watering jade, cacti, pepperomia and other succulent-leaved plants. Don't abandon your houseplants to their fate if you go away, for you can create a little greenhouse by enclosing each one in a plastic bag from the cleaners. A properly bagged plant will survive for many weeks without further attention.

February is the pits for most of us, but to the owls, it's their early spring and so it was that at the ungodly hour of 3 a.m. when the temperature hovered around 10 above, there was an "Owl Prowl." Twelve hardy souls set out in the dark with Kathleen Anderson leading the route through Middleboro and Lakeville and Wayne Peterson vocalizing to try to lure the owls from their roost. He was successful in attracting six great-horned owls and six screech owls, but the highlight of the expedition which lasted until 9:30 a.m. was the sighting of an adult bald eagle. Early in January, an annual census is taken throughout the nation and coordinated by the National Wildlife Federation. Wary of humans, eagles are not easily counted, but last year, 2,800 eagle watchers spotted 11,819 bald eagles in 42 states. The bald eagle is an endangered species in 43 states, attributed in part to the widespread use of DDT in the 60's and early 70's. The pesticide caused the birds to lay thin-shelled eggs. Since DDT was banned in 1972, the bald eagles have been on the way to making a comeback.

Although Haley's Comet is not due to return until later this year, astronomers are already getting excited about its first appearance since 1910. Jeannette Anderson recalls her father showing her the tail of the comet when she was only five years old. Now a grandmother of six, Mrs. Anderson says her father, the late Harry Perry, woke her up out of a sound sleep, took her to the window over-looking Fred Holmes' barn in Marshfield Hills and the sight inspired her to learn about our planets. A series of lectures by Gerry Flaherty, vice president of the South Shore Astronomical Society, will help us all to learn more about the Comet and winter skies. The first of a series of three will be offered Feb. 21 at 7:30 p.m. at the S.S. Natural Science Center in Norwell.

"Survival of the Fattest" is an interesting account of how to attract birds to our feeders. Written by Beverly Litchfield, an avid birder, it goes like this: "Stocking the pantry before a winter storm is common practice for humans. . . Have you noticed how busy your feeding station is just before a storm? Birds sense changes in weather and that's one reason for migration to warmer climates. Instead of migrating, weak or older birds try to survive the winter at local feeding stations; hence, a 'rare' bird might appear during the winter months when normally it would have gone south. Unusually warm weather in the fall might encourage some species to linger longer in this area. Warblers who normally feed on insects might be seen feeding on suet to provide the fat and protein their body needs. Birds will store fat on their bodies for energy and warmth needed to survive a cold winter's night. Therefore, they shop around for a good food supply and take up residence here for the winter. Birds lose the most weight on cold nights so feeders should be filled early in the morning. Just as squirrels and chipmunks store food in secret places, some birds will begin storing it as early as October."

When February's snows are only a memory, we'll all be stealing over to the yard of Marie and Frank Moss to see how their garden grows. When they moved to their new home, Frank and his daughter dug up about a thousand spring flowering bulbs at their former yard and then, of course, had to replant them after their backs had recovered, so the results should be something to see!

Paul Parent was right—but then, he usually is. If you've heard the popular Marshfield resident on Station WRKO each Sunday morning, you know how knowledgable the manager of Kennedy's Country Gardens is. Listeners who call in with their gardening problems get sensible, thoughtful advice and the nice part is, he makes it all sound so easy that soon we'll be surrounded by beautiful blooms. A member of the Garden Writers Association of America, he told me when I was selected to join recently, that I'd be deluged with catalogues, magazines and press releases and he was right about that, too. I'm even getting packages of seeds from a firm in Alberta, Canada and they include a note that they are in need of test gardeners so that they can have tomato lovers reporting to them from every state in the Union and every province in Canada on the success of their forthcoming varieties in their particular regions. I have their address if you're interested.

Driving along Rte. 139 one blustery February afternoon I delighted in the sign outside Green World Nurseries which read: "We're Planting Our Pansies." And speaking of driving, what do you suppose that salt which is keeping our main streets so beautifully clear is doing to the roadside plants and grasses, our drinking water, not to mention the fact that we'll probably all be investing in new mufflers as our car's undersides slowly corrode. Word even has it that the salt we sprinkle in our yard can harm our plant roots and cause infection in our pet's paws.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

The earliest known Valentine was sent in 1415 by--who else?--a Frenchman, Charles, duke of Orleans. I mention it only in case you've forgotten that his little ditty sent when he was a prisoner in the Tower of London, has resulted in tomorrow's elaborate observance, with hearts, flowers, candy and the like, expensive expressions of love. If you've been watching the barrage of ads, suggested Valentines now include: pizza, natural ranch mink, a deluxe spray steam and dry iron. Other gifts suggested as appropriate have included "Succulent Veal Parmigiana," "A Set of Four Monroe Shock Absorbers" and even "Scotch Tape." Much more appropos is that little something made especially for one's Valentine. A quiet dinner with the table set with red candles and napkins could begin with a glass of wine and these nibblies served by Cheryl Eckholm at a Hanover Newcomers' Gourmet dinner.

BILLY'S BITES

1 loaf party rye bread
1 1/2 c. chopped mushrooms, peppers and onions
1/2 lb. sliced American Cheese
Mayonnaise

Spread each bread slice with mayo. Place 1 tsp. of vegetables on top and cover with American Cheese. Bake in 350 oven for 10 to 15 min., or broil until cheese melts. Yield: 30 to 35 bites.

A rose remains traditional Valentine fare, for one red rose speaks more than a whole bouquet of anything else. It was said that Cleopatra and Marc Anthony held their trysts in rooms where rose petals lay ankle deep. Today we're unable to match such splendor and one of our florists tells me that a single such blossom will cost at least $4 this week, and probably $50 a dozen. In New York City, florists are expected to ask $100 a dozen, so how about cooking up a dish prepared by Michael Hynes, whose hobby is cooking and whose wife, Maureen, would certainly settle for a serving of his

STUFFED CABBAGE ROLLS

1 head cabbage
1 lb. lean ground beef
2 of each: green peppers, medium onions, chopped fine
1 c. soft bread crumbs
1/3 c. chili sauce
2 tsp. Worcestershire Sauce
1/2 tsp. salt, few grains pepper
1 can (8 oz.) tomato sauce
2 Tb. butter
1/2 c. sour cream

Core cabbage. Cook 7 min. in boiling, salted water. Drain. Cool. Remove 12 large outer leaves and cook remaining cabbage till tender. (Serve another day, chopped and creamed, or in a cheese sauce.) Meanwhile, cook beef, peppers and onions in oil until meat is browned. Add bread crumbs, chili and seasonings; mix well. Place equal amount of meat mix on each leaf. Roll and secure with wooden picks. Place in large skillet. Add tomato sauce, dot with butter, cover and simmer for one hour. Remove rolls to platter. Stir sour cream into skillet. Pour some of this mixture over rolls and serve remainder separately.

Roses may be traditional, but at those prices, most of us will have to be content to wait until summer when they flower freely in the garden. So, having to forego Cleo's romantic evening, let's make our Valentine's dinner rather special with this dish by Dorothy Long called

SPINACH—RICOTTA SOUFFLE

1/2 c. bread crumbs
2 pkg. frozen spinach
1/2 c. cooking oil
2 cloves garlic, sliced
4 eggs, separated
3/4 c. grated parmesan cheese
1 lb. ricotta cheese
1/4 tsp. nutmeg, pinch pepper

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Butter 1 1/2 qt. casserole. Brown garlic in oil and remove. To warm oil, add spinach and cook about 10 min., drain well. In large bowl beat yolks; add parmesan and ricotta cheeses, spinach, nutmeg and pepper and mix lightly. Beat egg whites until stiff in another bowl and gently fold into spinach mixture. Bake in casserole for 35 to 40 min., or until knife inserted comes out clean. This recipe can be served as a side vegetable, or main luncheon dish with a salad.

A farewell to Paragon Park

by Kathleen Kroll

Commentary

Who doesn't have a story of romance or terror to tell about Paragon Park? A day spent at Nantasket Beach was always sweeter because of the rides that flirted and winked from across the boulevard.

Losing a shoe on the Sky Ride, getting nauseous on the Parachute Jump, screaming for the operator to halt the Cyclone. This is the stuff of which memories are made. Such images flash back to mock and amuse in later years, usually triggered by a return visit to the "scene of the crime."

Paragon Park may not be a national treasure, but it most certainly qualifies as a South Shore tradition. A world without Paragon Park may be an aesthetically better one, but it will also be a boring, predictable one.

There's no doubt about it: I feel cheated.

Not only are they selling the park and replacing it with staid highrises, but they are also denying us our last hurrah at the Mecca of childhood dreams and adult indulgence.

With the demise of Paragon, only the area wealthy will be able to afford amusement parks for their kids. The Yuppies among us have long eschewed the call of the Nantasket neon and the blue-collar pulse of flying swings and flying horses.

Not many "ordinary folk" can afford a trip to Disney World even once in a lifetime, much less one a year.

We won't have Paragon Park to kick around anymore. The rattle of the rollercoaster and the bevy of bikers will be gone. Gone also will be the excitement of children as the family car rounds the curve that brings the white coaster tracks into view. Gone will be the sizable selection of kiddie rides and the dazzling array of death-defying torture chambers the young-at-heart love to tackle at least once every season.

This coming summer, and forevermore, our only option when the Cyclone calls or the Bubble Bounce beckons will be to drive for hours to Riverside Park and pay $10 just to enter the gates.

They say there's a park called Rocky Point in Rhode Island, but what Paragon buff even knows where that is? Apparently it is time to investigate alternatives.

But what happens to nostalgia when there is no place to relive one's innocence? For many, the fears and joys of childhood and adolescence have long been intertwined with memories of conquering the Caterpillar's darkness or getting up the nerve to ride the Cyclone for the first, and perhaps the last, time.

For some of us the real trepidation came in deciding to step into the scrolled boat of the Red Mill (more recently known as the Bermuda Triangle) knowing our first kiss waited within.

All in all it would have been nice to go back for one last look, for a final fling on the swings and one last spin on the Roundup or Rotor. Perhaps it would have been fitting to take a few photos and shed a few tears for lost youth, lost loves, lost dreams.

It may be true that you can't go home again, but at least while Paragon Park endured, we could share with our children a part of our own childhood.

Goodbye, Paragon. A part of us goes with you.

Scituate man pedals 11,000 miles across North America

"The East is a Kaleidoscope," Ramsden said "everything is a jumble. It's nice in a small pastoral way." The West is quite different, "like a pie chart." One block or section is plains, another mountains, carefully separate from each other.

In the east, "the trees are here because we let them . . . the west is a testament to the complete opposite."

In Montana, Ramsden remembers walking through an abandoned farm house and reading the scattered 1960 newspapers left there.

He can still hear the music of a herd of sheep crossing the road. "The bells ringing back and forth and the clop, clop, clop of their hooves."

Throughout the trip Ramsden was given food, shelter and money by complete strangers.

Traveling along the Columbia River in Washington and Oregon Ramsden saw no towns for stretches of up to 40 miles. Finally he came to a store where a train passed by. "Bums waved to me from the cars," he said. A pick-up truck drove up in a whirl of dust. The driver, Dr. Gib of Biddington, told Ramsden he made his living helping teachers. He "advocated standing in waste baskets to get the kids' attention."

After talking with Biddington for only ten minutes, Ramsden was offered the keys to his cabin at Mt. St. Helens. Ramsden stayed there for three days.

"I thought people were helping me out because I was such a great guy." Ramsden said. "They were just doing it because it was the right thing to do."

Ramsden believes traveling alone helped him to meet more people than if he was with other cyclists. "If you're alone, people come up and talk to you. If you're with friends, people are afraid."

He often went into a supermarket and ate the food right there. Or he would eat outside with his bicycle. "People would just come up to me and ask where I'm from."

"Always I was the center of attention," Ramsden said. "In Mexico all these people would gather around me and stare. I met many more natives because I was alone."

When Ramsden first arrived in Mexico he could not speak any Spanish. "After two months I could talk philosophy," one of his favorite subjects. "There is no comparison in traveling if you can speak the language to not being able to. I got to talk to all the cleaning ladies in the office buildings."

Along the way Ramsden met with some rather different people. In Mexico he came upon "three homosexual Mexican midgets."

Somewhere in the Midwest he encountered a lunatic who convinced Ramsden to go fishing with him. "He was a religious fanatic. We disagreed on everything." When the lunatic told Ramsden there was a voice inside him telling him to do Ramsden physical harm, Ramsden decided it was time to leave.

There were also many dangerous moments. "I've stood on the edge and looked down so many times," Ramsden said. In Mexico the bus drivers would always try to pass each other, sometimes three abreast. It was a way of challenging each other's machismo. Unfortunately Ramsden often found himself in their paths.

Mark Ramsden and his battered bicycle.

Biking through Phelps Texas from Houston in 100 degree weather, he was overtaken by muscle spasms. He thought it was around 9 p.m. Seeing lights in a post office, he stopped to ask for a thermometer. Instead, he was received by a double barrelled shotgun. He was forced to sit with the gun in his ear for half an hour until the police arrived.

There had been a prison break in the next town, and like the inmates Ramsden had shaved his head. The man at the post office believed him to be an escaped convict. The police came and released him. They told him the man who held him at gun point was probably the best person in town. "They said anybody else would have shot me."

Of all the places Ramsden has been, Mt. St. Helens and Mexico hold the deepest impressions in his mind. In his collection of memorabilia Ramsden has a bag full of dust from the volcano. "Mt. St. Helens was lunar . . . a frightening place . . . everything's dead."

"Mexico was a continual daily profound religious rebirth. Every single day was absolutely perfect. I played with children on the roof of a church during mass." As he walked along the edge of the roof "pieces of sandstone fell down on the street below. I was courting death."

In Mexico where he traveled for three months, Ramsden became an avid "water fountain swimmer. I've been hassled by the police for it." He also spent a great deal of time playing with Mexican children.

"I felt inhuman, limitless especially in Mexico. I lost some of my ego there but felt that I could fly. I literally felt I could fly if I jumped off a mountain."

In Mexico City he straddled a wall which divided a wealthy section and a slum. "The people in the slums and the rich people couldn't see each other. I was looking into all these people's lives and they couldn't see me." While sitting on the wall, representatives of the Catholic church went from shack to shack in the slums asking for money.

Ramsden hit some emotional low points on his journey. In Mexico he was sick every three weeks. He had no sleeping bag in the West and often slept outside in 25 degree weather. It rained several times and after a night of sleeping in dry clothes he was forced to wear his wet clothing for fear of getting all is clothes soaked. Many times he could not brush his teeth for want of a toothbrush, something he did not want to spend money on. He also went for as long as eight days without a shower.

"It was lonely at times." He often "fished for places to stay" when he talked to people. He shoplifted and pulled the old "dine and dash" routine gorging himself in a restaurant and then running out on the bill.

"After a while I began to expect charity," Ramsden admitted. "I would hate people if they didn't give me food."

Of the $2,300 he spent on the trip, 20% was lost or stolen. Even his journals were stolen, things he cannot replace.

After a particularly long day on his bike, Ramsden stopped at a music store, walked in and picked up a guitar. His hands were so stiff from grasping the handlebars, he could not form cords. "It was devastating not to be able to play. I thought I'd be a cripple from this bicycle trip."

When Ramsden reached Houston, Texas he was forced to fly home on May 30, 1984 because he came down with anemia. "My iron count was way down." After he recuperated for two months he hitchhiked to a friend's house in North Hampton, Mass. While on a short bicycle trip he flipped over and broke his collarbone in two places.

Despite the broken collarbone he hitchiked back to Houston where he recuperated again for two weeks before getting back on his bike and riding home.

Ramsden offers his advice to travelers. "Never ask for directions at a furniture store. Ask at a supermarket" chances are you could get free food. Travel alone — you meet more people.

He also has an idea for a new brand of luggage which helps the hitchhiker flag down rides Jerry Jug luggage. Carry your clothes in gasoline jugs. It makes people think you need gas.

Ramsden will also offer you his philosophy. "I've been through so many philosphies. They are all true and they're all contradictory."

"I'm an anarchist" he said, "but I don't believe it strongly enough to do anything about it.

He has changed because of the trip. "I've become a much more giving person. I embrace people because it will make them feel good. I used to be pretty stingy."

"I'm uninhibited now. I want to show people my world. I finally did something for my personal indulgence," he added. "Now I can give without resenting."

Although Ramsden said he has "become almost aimless," he plans several more trips. He wants to bike through the back roads of Appalachia, through the deep South, to the islands in the south seas, New Zealand, and Africa. "I'd like to be the first person to climb Niagara Falls," and he swears "I will be on the top of Everest by the time I'm 25.

With his "insatiable curiosity," Ramsden says he wants to know everything. "I believe people should test themselves," he said.

As a bicycle messenger in Boston, Ramsden often plans his future trips. In an elevator last week, he wished he was back in Mexico. "I believe I can attain ecstasy through imagination," he said.

Making the case for a sensible hat

By Lois Martin

There has been a slacking off of self determination among us. That is, more and more people have allowed themselves to be intimidated out of wearing sensible hats.

I say this prejudicially, because I am among those who own perfectly sensible head gear, which has stayed too long in the closet.

I have sometimes allowed (notice that's a tough past tense) snickers, sneers and untoward remarks uncouched by diplomacy to dissuade me from wearing warm hats that protect me from winter.

I have always had a tendency to favor hats that others see as fitting for Siberia, where you don't get out a lot. In the past there were a few who saw fit to be outspokenly disdainful of them. That has not meant I didn't wear them.

Come the wintry season, I've been one who whipped out the large collection of hats, mittens, gloves and scarves which have been part of my personal belongings since I was a person.

The unusual amalgamation of headgear includes two that Aunt Lote made me and whose fuzz has worn off in places (the hats not Aunt Lote); several surviving ones from a spell of knitting that overcame me after the dog chewed up the knitting directions; a fluorescent orange hunting cap, which I have yet to wear and a strange looking rabbit hat that ties under the chin. I might have let all those go were it not for the simple sensibility of their being warm, durable backups.

Recently while browsing in our irregular, discontinued boutique, I spotted my newest possession—a white pullover the head, part nylon with fake sheepskin hat. Warm as toast it looked, fresh and clean, and $1.69.

I'm no fool. I know a bargain when I see one and I couldn't wait to buy it. There was this chance, I feared, that the registers would shut down before I was able to fork over the money in exchange for the valuable headpiece.

It is my training to treat winter for what it is, a time to go out dressed as if to plow on a moment's notice. Sparing the need for glamor to those who have but to step daintily from elevator to limousine and to lobby, I swarth myself in the rugged individual's attire for which I was reared. Stocky boots with treads, seasonable coat, scarf of relative blending colors, sturdy gloves that grip and . . . my hat.

I tried on my new one for a group of people whom I had invited to dinner. Not one of them struggled with the theory that there's always something nice to say about something. They told me unequivocably that I looked just like every other Boston Bag Lady, that they'd kill me if I ever wore it while in their outdoor presence, and that if I couldn't take it back I should throw it away before people knew I had it.

Jealousy takes strange forms, doesn't it? Had I been a more thoughtful person I could have grabbed a hat like mine for each of them. They, faced with no such uptown apparel, were bedeviled by envy.

I forgave them.

And last weekend while the storm/sleet sputtered in our faces, it was I who wore her sensible bonnet. It is true that I walked alone while other people whom I know well, kept a 50 foot distance from me. But only three people offered me housing and money. And I was warm.

Even this morning while I shoveled to free an entirely stuck car which blocked all entrance and passage to Shady Lane, there was the warmth of my little white hat. I am a lucky woman. Someone sees me in that hat, he or she knows I need help. And, hey, I got it. The neighbors pushed me and my car all the way to the plowed road. They seemed in a hurry. . . .

But I share well. My hat is available to anyone who would like to borrow it, along with a few words of wisdom. When you're warm, you are better equipped to turn a cold cheek to people who treat you like you're released from the home for the afternoon.

CREATURE COMFORTS by Liz GORFINKLE

By Elisabeth Gorfinkle

True, Ipswich and Essex are on the North Shore. But the fate of the deer in the Crane Memorial Reservation and the Crane Wildlife Refuge could easily be shared by our South Shore deer.

As long as the threat of overpopulation exists for deer, it will be accompanied by starvation, disease and destruction of habitat. The final quotient is death, very painful death.

And for all land managers who maintain deer habitat throughout Massachusetts, how to prevent the tragic results of overpopulation is a pressing issue.

Believe it or not, land managers are not necessarily excited about controlled hunts as a means to managing deer populations. But it can truly be considered a humane option, according to a multitude of scientific data collected over the years by the state's Division of Fisheries and Wildlife.

Certain private animal welfare agencies thoroughly believe that hunting is evil, and the division, which is responsible for regulating Massachusetts' wildlife, is really a front for blood-thirsty hunters.

On the other hand, many ardent hunters are busy accusing these agency members of being insane.

All the while, I haven't been getting the impression either side is sticking too closely to the facts.

I received a letter, dated Jan. 10, from The Trustees of Reservations (TTOR), the agency which manages the North Shore property in question. The letter included the intended deer management plan with an explanation of why it's necessary.

I have discussed the management plan with Wayne Mitton, TTOR's Northeastern regional supervisor, and with Wayne MacCallum, the division's assistant wildlife research director.

Because the letter is a complete, accurate and cogent summary, which includes large portions of the information Mitton and MacCallum gave me, I've chosen to directly quote parts of its text:

Since (a public hunt was called off in November 1983, because protesters threatened to put themselves between the hunters and the deer,) both TTOR's staff and volunteer committees have been seeking a practical and humane way to reduce the number of deer at both the Crane Memorial Reservation and the Crane Wildlife Refuge, Ipswich and Essex, a total of 2100 acres. Both herds have increased to more than five times the number either property can support, resulting in continuing starvation and severe vegetation damage.

During the winter of 1983-84, at least 17 deer, all but one of them fawns, died for lack of adequate forage. Undoubtedly many others perished unfound. In addition, the deer continued to dominate the understory (lower) vegetation of both properties so completely that they threatened the fragile ecosystem of the dunes and the surrounding habitat. In addition high browse lines mar the natural scenery, and wildflowers have been practically exterminated. (It is important to note that TTOR is entrusted to care for all plant and animal species on their land, many of which are threatened by the spread of disease and vegetation, damage, according to Mitton.)

TTOR also faces the problem of the deer tick, the carrier of Lyme disease, a potentially serious arthritic condition which affects humans. The tick appeared on the properties in 1980 and has multiplied many-fold since, creating a public health problem. Since deer are the primary host of this tick, current scientific thought believes that deer tick populations are directly related to deer populations. (MacCallum said the correllation is believed to be as strong as the connection made between smoking and lung cancer.)

Research done on these properties by the Harvard School of Public Health indicates 74 percent of the nymphs and 87 percent of the adult ticks carry Lyme disease. In 1983 five out of 27 TTOR employees on the properties were infected, and at least 15 to 20 residents along Agrilla Road, the road leading to Crane Beach, contracted the disease.

The letter goes on to say that TTOR hired Dr. Aaron N. Moen, professor of wildlife ecology at Cornell University, to study the health of the deer, the state of their habitat and possible control options.

At the same time TTOR invited eight interested groups to form an advisory committee to comment on the parameters of Moen's work. The committee members were the Friends of Animals, Inc, Harvard School of Public Health, Humane Society of the United States, the division, Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Tufts University School of Veterinary Medicine, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the University of Massachusetts Department of Forestry and Wildlife.

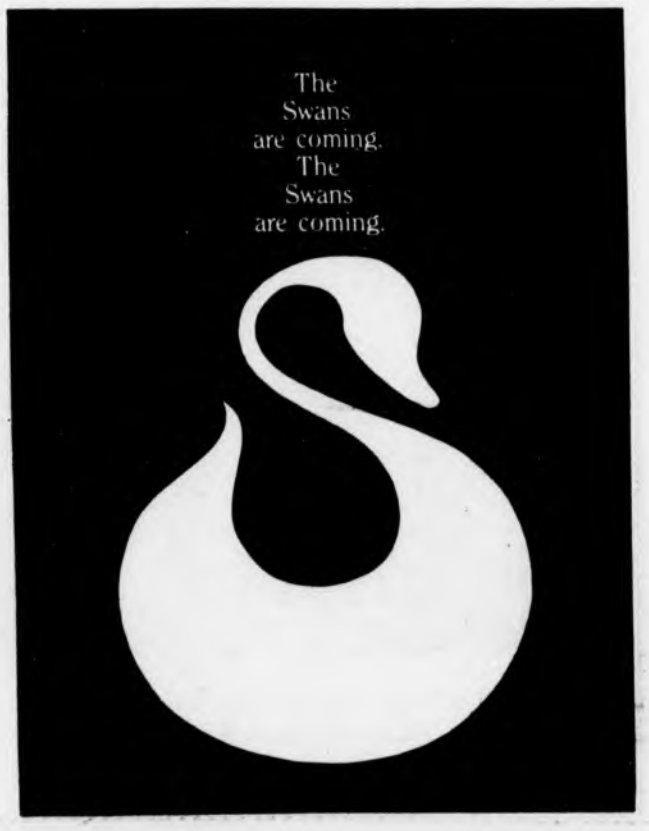
In October 1984, Moen corroborated division's findings that the number of deer wintering on the properties far exceeded available forage resources. Both agreed that Crane Beach and Castle Hill have a deer-carrying capacity of around 40, while Hog Island can support only about 15. An aerial census in February 1984 counted 165 deer at Crane Beach and Castle Hill and 75 deer are routinely counted by TTOR's staff on Hog Island.

And continued research by Harvard indicated that both the incidence of Lyme disease and the deer tick population was on the rise.

Mitton explained that when the advisory committee got back together in November 1984, all the members agreed overpopulation was a serious problem. But they had mixed feelings about TTOR's and the division's management proposal of the use of a sharpshooter to kill weakened deer and a controlled public hunt to decrease the overall population through a carefully devised quota system.

The Friends of Animals were dead set against any form of shooting.

The group has threatened to try to obstruct any kind of hunting by positioning themselves between the hunters and the deer, an action which would actually lead to more deer being taken, said MacCallum.



The more people in the field, MacCallum explained, the more the deer will be herded right into the hunters' range of fire, he said.

MacCallum said in a press conference last Wednesday that the division, which under current law represents the Commonwealth (the legal owner of the deer), has given TTOR the go-ahead to begin the sharpshooter program immediately.

Mitton said last Friday that the sharpshooter can't go to work until negotiations are iron out with the Ipswich selectmen.

Next week, Creature Comforts will explore why the division decided that transporting the deer was not a viable option.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

"Beacon Hill Roll Call" records local representatives' votes on three roll calls from the week of February 4 through 8. There were no roll calls in the Senate.

A "Yea" vote is for the package, a "Nay" vote is against it.

JOINT RULES (H 1100) — House 142-2, approved a package of joint House-Senate rules for the 1985-1986 session. Key changes include giving committees oversight responsibilities; requiring a public hearing on every bill; allowing committees to draft and report out their own "committee" bills; allowing one committee member to require a committee roll call on any bill; providing for the carryover of legislation from the first year of a session to the second; and prohibiting passage of laws by inserting language in outside sections of a state budget. Supporters said the package will truly reform and democratize the joint rules and give individual members more input. Opponents said the changes do not go far enough and stressed the need for more reforms. The Senate has approved a different version of joint rules and the differences must now be resolved.

State Rep. William Flynn did not vote on the measure. Reps. Robert Ambler, Suzanne Bump, Robert Cerasoli, Frank Hynes, Charles Mann and Mary Jeanette Murray voted "Yea."

ABOLISH COMMITTEE (H 1100) — House 113-35, rejected an amendment abolishing the Committee on Federal Financial Assistance. Amendment supporters said the committee is essentially useless and unnecessary and pays $100,000 to a staff of six persons.

They said it basically deals with a small number of non-binding resolutions about how the Massachusetts legislature feels about federal issues.

Opponents said the committee has special expertise to review federal aid issues and claimed it is important for the legislature to make its voice heard in Washington. (A "Yea" vote is for abolishing the committee. A "Nay" vote is for retaining the committee.)

Reps. Mann and Murray voted "Yea." Reps. Ambler, Bump, Cerasoli, Flynn and Hynes voted "Nay."

INTENT OF BILL (H 1100) — House 100-48, rejected an amendment requiring each member to include a written "statement of intent" with each bill he or she files.

Amendment supporters said requiring the sponsor to state the intent of the bill will help clarify the purpose of the measure.

They noted many courts and agencies misinterpret the intent of some bills.

Opponents said this amendment has serious legal implications which could create a confusing situation. Many noted the amendment lacks any provision for review of the "letter of intent" by any counsel or committee.

Voting "Yea" were Reps. Hynes, Mann, Murray, Flynn and Bump. Voting "Nay" were Reps. Ambler and Cerasoli.

Robert Stutman: Drug Enforcement Agent at large who said Sullivan would never be taken. He was and is in jail. Recently Frank LePere, considered the #1 most wanted man in New England by the DEA was arrested in his mountaintop hideaway in New York. Stutman lead the charge.

When Stutman came on in '79, LePere's name was one of the first he heard. And the arrest of the man indicated as a 'kingpin' in drug organization was a peak moment for Stutman's department.

He works with a number of women agents. "They are the best thing to have happened in drug enforcement," he says. "They (bad guys) overlook women more easily. A woman can get in an apartment where a man cannot. And they bring a different view to the job. They're (women) a real plus."

The DEA plays hardball. It accepts men and women from 21 to 35. Mandatory retirment is at 55. Stutman will pick up his option to retire at 50, but to switch careers and not to laze about. He's not the type.

He'll probably do more then of what he does now as time allows. He includes as much public speaking as possible. A lot of that is done in high schools, where he makes clear the impact of drugs.

Stutman uses self-protection in his lifestyle. He recognizes people who don't play fair in society are the ones whose wrath he has most inspired. He has no discussion of the types of protection. But he says he manages to squeeze in a degree of normalcy. He is a man on whom no one should count to play dead . . . at anything.

But if the danger seems a detractor, he says the absence of boredom is a plus. And there's satisfaction getting the goods and the guys who distribute them to kids who can become victims of drugs.

He says he hasn't known moments of terror. He's had after-the-fact fear when he realized what could have happened. He tells about the time he was going down a one-way street the wrong way as an undercover man. He was the only white in 10 blocks. He'd lost his surveillance and the dealer who walked with him said, "There's a fed out here named Stutman trying to buy drugs. Watch your ass."

Stutman said he believed at that moment he was going to have his final view of that part of his anatomy. Not so. "The guy sold me dope."

Rudyard Kipling's "If" is on Stutman's wall in significant size . . . "If you can keep your head while all about you men are losing theirs and blaming it on you . . . "

Dubin named telemarketing chief

Telemarketing, the professional application of phone sales, has come to Marshfield.

David Cutler, publisher of the nine Mariner Newspapers announced that his Marshfield based company has added a new division to be called "Advanced Telemarketing".

Advanced Telemarketing, located in the Main Street headquarters will focus on a variety of projects both for the newspapers themselves and outside accounts. The division will concentrate on circulation maintenance and expansion, classified advertising, and related activities. Also Advanced Telemarketing will provide direct sales, fund-raising, market research, political polling, lead finding, and lead qualification services.

Steven Dubin, a telemarketing consultant for the Small Business Development Center of Southeastern Massachusetts University, will head up the division. He has designed and implemented telemarketing operations for a variety of industries.

"Just as the drive-up window was an innovation, telemarketing has slowly earned its acceptance as a cost-effective marketing tool," said Dubin. "Telemarketing provides convenience to an ever fast-paced society. Within minutes consumers can transact business that may have taken hours by a personal visit or days by mail."

Telemarketing has journeyed light years from the early days of 'phone sales'. The mere mention of the term 'phone sales' evoked images of a boiler room operation with low ceilings, exposed plumbing, musty cinderblock walls, and dim lighting. One envisioned chain-smoking characters spilling coffee over one another as they holler into row upon row of phones about products that might not really exist.

AT&T, in an attempt to sell more of their long distant lines, has been extolling the virtues of telemarketing. Success stories of reputable companies using telemarketing has changed perception. With the average cost of an industrial sales call exceeding $200, and more than $1,000 to finally consumate a sale, most progressive companies are looking to telemarketing as a low cost solution.

Lincoln-Mercury's new "Yuppie" dream car

XR4Ti's power-assisted brakes, designed to cope with autobahn speeds, are also impressive, with 10.2-inch discs in front and 10 x 2.2-inch drums in the rear.

Inside the XR4Ti's, logic dictates that everything fall within the sweep of the driver's hand, a glance of the eye. XR4Ti's analog instrumentation is a testimony to logic, detail, and efficiency.

The Merkur XR4T is available to be ordered at Fore River Motors, or any Ford-Lincoln-Mercury Dealer. Jacques Dunn, at Fore River Motors, invites the public to his open house all week long, for "GMC and Chrysler Corporation have increased 1985 prices," says Dunn. "But Fore River Motors has kept the prices at the 1984 level." He invites the public to come in and see for themselves during the Washington's Birthday celebration.

Imported from Germany and sold exclusively through selected Lincoln-Mercury dealers, this new precisely designed three door, five passenger XR4Ti will appeal to the "YUPPIE" market. It's objective is not compete with the BMW, Saab, Volvo and Audi, but to surpass them.

It looks like no other car in the U.S. It's form is dictated by its function. That function is to use air-flow management as no other car before. To achieve that, XR4Ti has a drag coefficient of just 0.33 — one of the lowest ever for a production car.

Assisting its superb aerodynamics is a 360-degree polycarbonate anti-corrosion system on the lower portion of the car.

The rear spoiler assists handling by reducing lift and generating down-force, effectively using the wind to push the tires onto the road surface for added adhesion.

The XR4Ti is powered by an advanced 2.3-liter overhead cam electronically fuel-injected turbo-charged four-cylinder engine mated to a five-speed manual overdrive transmission. It produces 175 hp* and 200 lbs. ft.* of torque, moving from zero to 60 mph in an impressive 7.8 seconds.

The independent rear suspension on XR4Ti reduces upsprung weight, contributing to better handling on rough roads, and intrudes less on the passenger and cargo areas than does a conventional live axle.

SUBARU

All new Subaru wagon and sedan highlight 85 line

GL 4WD Hatchback

Subaru--the only automotive make offering an across-the-board choice of "On Demand" 4-wheel-drive--enters 1985 with an appealing array of vehicles featuring contemporary styling and spirited performance.

The first all-new Subaru models in 5 years, the Sedan and Wagon, reveal sleek, aerodynamic styling outside and more room inside.

Heading the long list of technological advances is a new, overhead-cam engine which marries the low-vibration, horizontally-opposed Subaru engine design with modern overhead-cam technology. Standard on all 1985 Wagons and Sedans, the new OHC engine has up to 29% more horsepower (depending on trim) as well as up to 8% better gas mileage than last year.

In addition, the spirited 4WD Turbo Sedan is available with a manual transmission for the first time, and what's more, the new 4WD gearbox is a Dual Range 5-speed.

The big story inside the new Wagon and Sedan is space--lots of it. Passenger space and luggage space in both models have been increased substantially.

In the Sedan, front leg room and shoulder room are up almost 2½ inches, while rear leg room is up almost 4 inches. Trunk space has been increased an amazing 27%. Plus, all Sedans have a convenient compartment beneath the trunk, and top line models have a very practical "trunk-through" folding rear seat.

'85 Subaru Wagons show similar increases in head room, leg room and shoulder room, front and rear. Rear seat passenger room received particular attention with 3½ inches extra leg room and 3 inches extra shoulder room in the sleek new Wagon.

The Subaru Difference is stronger than ever for 1985. In addition to the availability of front-wheel-drive or "On Demand" 4WD throughout the model range, there's the combination of durability and reliability with value and quality--Subaru out-ranked all other Japanese and U.S. automakers in a recent J.D. Power Customer Satisfaction Index survey.

And of course there's the fact that Subaru is the only American-operated, publicly owned import car company in the U.S. We produce value products that are uniquely right for the American consumer, while the public participates in the success of our business the company, whose stock is traded on the national over-the-counter market under the designation SBRU, markets Subaru automobiles and products through distributors serving over 800 dealers throughout the U.S.

On this solid platform of traditional values, Subaru adds more style, more performance and more convenience for 1985.

TOYOTA MR2 Sports car makes U.S. debut

You can have your cake and eat it too. That's the bottom line on the Toyota MR2, the exciting two-seat sports car set to make its U.S. debut in late January offering a unique blend of performance and economy.

This innovative Toyota sports car features 16-valve, twin cam performance, ideal mid-engine weight distribution, a smooth, aerodynamic wedge shape design and a low, wide posture that combines with 4-wheel independent suspension to deliver excellent handling characteristics.

The front design of the MR2 features a low, slanted hood with retractable headlamps. Its low, wide appearance is enhanced by a wide tread, beefy 185/60 series tires, and a low front air dam. The wedge shape is highlighted by a flush-mounted, aerodynamic wrap-around windshield positioned at a 60 degree angle from vertical.

The rear of the MR2 features a straight back window glass, and a flat rear engine cover and rear deck lid add an extra measure of stability to the MR2's rear styling.

Inside, the MR2 is a blend of function and comfort. Both headroom and legroom are about equal to the much larger Celica model and a large glass area provides maximum visibility. The dash panel is low and moved forward to give an open feeling to the interior. But there's no mistaking the sports car nature of the MR2 as evidenced by its cockpit style controls and multi-adjustable sport seats.

A long list of standard comfort and convenience items includes a tilt steering wheel, remote power mirrors, intermittent windshield wipers, rear window defogger, leather wrapped steering wheel and shift knob, rear console box, tinted glass, AM/FM/MPX stereo, digital quartz clock and full carpeting. There's also optional cruise control, power windows and door locks, removable sunroof, automatic air conditioning, rear spoiler and a stereo/cassette upgrade.

The heart of the MR2 is the powerful yet economical Toyota 1.6-liter, 16-valve (TC-16), twin cam engine that produces a high-revving (7,700 rpm redline) 112 horsepower while delivering an estimated fuel economy of 26 mpg in the city and 29 mpg on the highway.

The unique combination of performance and economy has been accomplished by the adoption of an intake control valve in the Toyota Variable Induction System (TVIS) which assures maximum utilization of the four valves per cylinder configuration.

Four-wheel independent suspension, power-assisted 4-wheel disc brakes, rack-and-pinion steering, low pressure gas-filled shock absorbers and an optimum suspension layout and geometry are the suspension features that make the MR2 stand out for its competitors in handling performance.

At the rear there's also a ball joint type stabilizer for high cornering ability combined with a dual link strut type suspension for excellent stability and riding comfort. A high caster angle and short caster trail have been adopted to maximize straight line stability and cornering ability while contributing to overall controllability on any road surface. Offset coil springs both front and rear maximize ride comfort.

The ratio of wheelbase and tread is also an important handling factor. The MR2's 91.3 inch wheelbase and 56.7/56.7 inch front/rear tread delivers a 1.61 wheelbase/tread ratio, unsurpassed by any of its competition.

The overall length of the MR2 is slightly less than the Tercel while the overall width equals that of the Celica. The tread is wider than the '84 Cressida. That adds up to a short, low and wide compact sports car with a high level of stability.

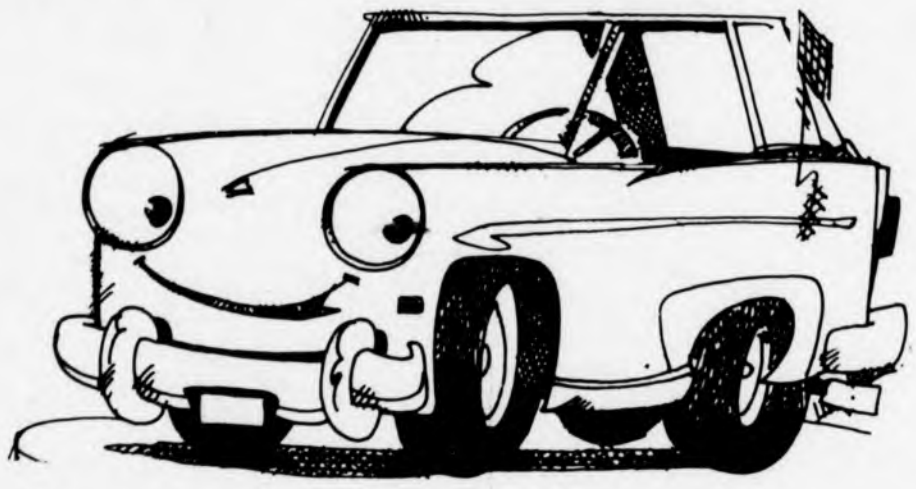
Tips to keep your car from aging



How many times have you found yourself apologizing to an unexpected guest who is a passenger in your car? A poorly maintained car says a lot about the owner and his or her care of possessions. Your automobile not only represents a large investment of hard-earned dollars, but also reflects personal standards and habits.

Following a regular schedule of personal and professional maintenance enables you to increase dramatically the trade-in value of your car and your pride of ownership. Practice these tips to keep your car from aging.

Set some time aside in your weekly schedule to keep your car's appearance in top condition. A gleaming, well-groomed outward appearance keeps your car looking new longer. Regular washing is a must. Use a mild soap made for cars and cool water. Do not use laundry detergents. They will dull the finish. And, although you may be tempted to improve your suntan while washing your car, don't do it! For best results, always wash your car in the shade.

Vinyl tops need special attention. They will continue to look their best if you use a mild soap and lukewarm water for cleaning. Scrubbing lightly with a soft-bristle brush will thoroughly clean the textured surface. When the vinyl is dry, apply vinyl dressing to revitalize the surface. This keeps it with a showroom look. Follow the product's directions for best results. Mend vinyl rips early. Repair kits will save you many dollars at trade-in time.

The next procedure is removal of tar. Use tar solvents and rub gently. Wash the solvent off before applying wax. Also, give some attention to the chrome areas. You can purchase products specifically developed to clean rust spots from chrome. Wash thoroughly before applying wax to the chrome. Wax will retard rusting and keep the chrome in sparkling condition.

In general, you will get your money's worth from soft paste waxes. Using clean, soft cloths, shine only small areas at a time. Wax will not be needed with every washing, but it's easy to tell when you need to wax your car. Water will no longer form beads on the surface. When waxing, apply steady pressure, but never rub hard.

Occasionally, you should check for surface scratches and chips on the paint finish. You may decide to repair these small scars yourself. To find the number of the paint used on your car, you must look two places — under the hood or on the serial plate. If it's not on the serial plate, which is located on the dash, usually on the driver's side, then look under the hood. Here you should find the plate in the radiator area or on the car's fire wall (the panel between you and the engine area). You should be able to get small bottles of pre-mixed paint from your auto dealer or parts and service center. If he doesn't have your number in stock, he can refer you to a paint shop that does or will mix the color for you.

If the spot is the size of a dime or less, you may want to sand it carefully to eliminate a rough border. You should also use a primer to build up layers before applying the paint that matches the finish of your car. This procedure is fine for scratches and chips. It will not work for rust spots. That requires much more preparation.

Do not forget to clean the interior of your car. It needs regular attention, too. Clean out the ashtrays. Wipe down the upholstery with a vinyl furniture spray or cleaning fluid for fabric stains. Use leather soap and water for real leather. The carpeting needs vacuuming and shampooing if dingy. Repair vinyl or fabric rips and tears as early as possible with products developed for just such needs.

Practicing these tips will keep you proud of your car and will also keep it from aging before you're ready to trade it in.

Follow the product's directions for best results. Mend vinyl rips early. Repair kits will save you many dollars at trade-in time.

The next procedure is removal of tar. Use tar solvents and rub gently. Wash the solvent off before applying wax. Also, give some attention to the chrome areas. You can purchase products specifically developed to clean rust spots from chrome. Wash thoroughly before applying wax to the chrome. Wax will retard rusting and keep the chrome in sparkling condition.

In general, you will get your money's worth from soft paste waxes. Using clean, soft cloths, shine only small areas at a time. Wax will not be needed with every washing, but it's easy to tell when you need to wax your car. Water will no longer form beads on the surface. When waxing, apply steady pressure, but never rub hard.

Occasionally, you should check for surface scratches and chips on the paint finish. You may decide to repair these small scars yourself. To find the number of the paint used on your car, you must look two places — under the hood or on the serial plate. If it's not on the serial plate, which is located on the dash, usually on the driver's side, then look under the hood. Here you should find the plate in the radiator area or on the car's fire wall (the panel between you and the engine area). You should be able to get small bottles of pre-mixed paint from your auto dealer or parts and service center. If he doesn't have your number in stock, he can refer you to a paint shop that does or will mix the color for you.

If the spot is the size of a dime or less, you may want to sand it carefully to eliminate a rough border. You should also use a primer to build up layers before applying the paint that matches the finish of your car. This procedure is fine for scratches and chips. It will not work for rust spots. That requires much more preparation.

Do not forget to clean the interior of your car. It needs regular attention, too. Clean out the ashtrays. Wipe down the upholstery with a vinyl furniture spray or cleaning fluid for fabric stains. Use leather soap and water for real leather. The carpeting needs vacuuming and shampooing if dingy. Repair vinyl or fabric rips and tears as early as possible with products developed for just such needs.

Practicing these tips will keep you proud of your car and will also keep it from aging before you're ready to trade it in.

PERSONAL MAINTENANCE SAVES MONEY

Like any mechanical device, your automobile requires regular maintenance. Some areas require a mechanic or technician; others can be handled by you, the owner. The amount of money you can save is directly related to the degree of knowledge you possess about your automobile. Do not mislead yourself into believing your car doesn't need to be regularly maintained. If you or a professional do not perform the service, your car's condition will rapidly deteriorate. You then face high repair bills and loss of transportation.

What are the routine maintenance jobs that any novice can perform? They are regular checking of the car's major fluids — battery, radiator, crankcase oil — and tire pressure. These areas should be checked when you fill up with gasoline or at least once a month. Since the need for these fluids may not be as obvious as the need for gasoline, you are responsible for checking the other fluid systems in order to deter major damage. In most cases, your automobile guages will give you strong indications about fluid conditions. However, visual checking is still highly recommended.

Let's start with oil. Your motor needs lubrication to work efficiently. Some cars burn more oil than others, so your car and your driving habits may influence how often you need to add oil. Find the oil stick located under the hood of your car. Check the level indicator when the car is cool. If you have been running the engine, some oil may be distributed throughout the engine and prevent your getting an accurate reading on the stick.

Oil weights (viscosity) and filter changes will vary according to the type of car you drive, the weather conditions and the amount of driving you do. Read your car manual for suggestions about these items.

The oil used in your engine performs four functions. It lubricates the moving parts of the engine and reduces friction. Reduced friction reduces wear and tear on the motor. Oil acts as an engine coolant to keep the metal at a safe temperature. It cleans out dirt particles by depositing them in the oil filter. Oil also serves as a sealant between cylinder walls and piston rings. Obviously, then, checking the oil is very important to motor efficiency. Not checking the oil regularly may result in a costly repair called engine overhaul.

Next, check your car's battery. This device provides the electrical current that enables your car to start. If you see white ashy residue on the terminals or cable ends, clean it off with a wire brush. Cover the exposed metal with grease (petroleum jelly) to resist corrosion. Then check each cell for fluid level. You should be able to see the fluid as a little concave bubble about two inches inside the cell. If the cell fluid is low, fill it with distilled water until you see the concave bubble. Do not fill to overflowing. The overflow will be battery acid which is corrosive to you and your car.

Regular battery checkups ensure long life and save dollars in battery replacement. Keeping an eye on the battery gauge will usually tell you about its condition. If the charge is lower than usual, it's definitely time to check the battery. If it's discharging, you have a problem that should be attended to immediately. See a professional.

Another part that you can easily maintain under the hood of your car is the radiator. Check its fluid level by removing the cap on a cool radiator. Avoid checking the radiator when the car has been running. It may be hot enough to burn you should steam escape when the cap is removed. If you have been running the car, but it not overheated, you can use a towel to protect your hands. The cap has a half-turn safety lock that will enable heat to escape before you completely remove the cap. If you misjudge the pressure, the safety cap will prevent it from blowing off and hitting you.

Never remove the cap on the radiator or even release it halfway if the car's gauge reads HOT or above normal. You will be injured and/or burned if you attempt to do so. If your car overheats due to hot weather, slow driving conditions, or faulty fan belts, do this: Pull off the road and shut down the engine. Get out and raise the hood after you turn on your hazard lights. Do NOT touch the radiator. Let the car cool down for thirty minutes to one hour. You'll know how long by the gauge reading.

While the car is cooling, you may attempt to find a service station since you most likely will need assistance. Your car may overheat if it has a low fluid level in the radiator, loose or broken fan belts, or a damaged or cracked radiator or head gasket. Under any of these circumstances, you will need assistance to get the car to a service station.

When you check the fluid in your radiator and find you need to add more, it is safest to add pre-mixed coolant. That way you are assured of running your car with the proper water/alcohol mixture.

While checking fluids, don't forget the windshield fluid container. Once again, pre-mixed fluids for cleaning windshields are your safest bet. In the long run, using the pre-mixed fluids may cost you a bit, but not nearly as much as replacement of major parts due to damage.

The last item requiring regular maintenance is tire pressure. You can find the appropriate pressure level in the car's maintenance manual or on the tires. Radials will always list the pressure required on the sidewalls. Use a pressure gauge to check your tires once a month. Weather and driving conditions will cause changes. Under extreme weather conditions and usage, check the pressure more than once a month. While you're at it, remember the spare tire. A poorly inflated spare is of little use when you have a flat in the middle of an interstate highway.

Personal attention to these auto features will save you dollars in major repairs. More importantly, such attention will save you time and effort when depending on your automobile for business and pleasure.

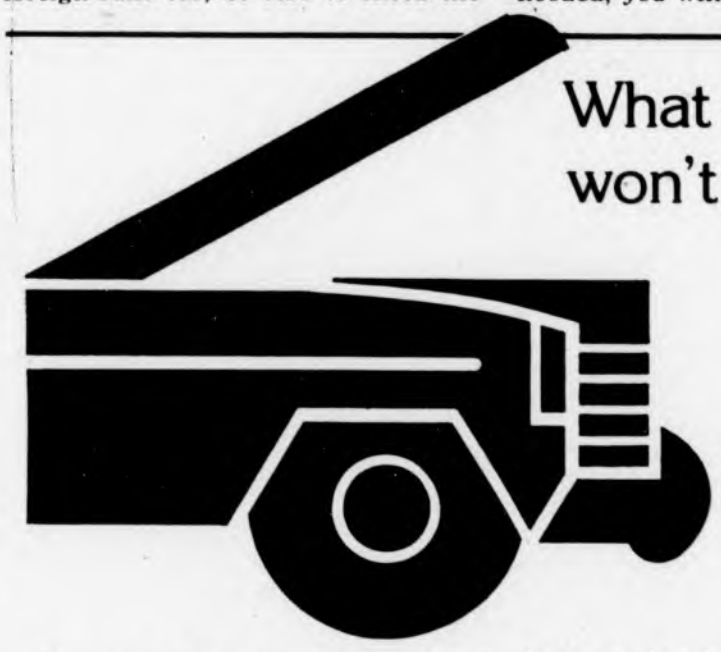
What to do when your car won't start. . .

If your car won't start, you may be able to locate and fix the trouble yourself by checking out a few of its mechanical components. However, before you tackle that task, start by checking the obvious. If you have an automatic transmission, verify that it is in the "P" or "N" gear. If you're okay there, check the gasoline gauge and mileage. You may have a faulty gauge reading and actually be out of gas. (The car will sound normal when you try to start it. The engine will be turning over, but it will not start.) If your mileage indicates that you have fuel and the guage verifies you do, then your next checkpoint is the ignition switch.

Since this switch (starter) gets frequent use and little to no maintenance, it may be shorting out or simply failing to perform its purpose — cranking the engine. The solution is to have it checked by a mechanic and replaced if the problem lies there. Since ignition switches are sealed units, they must be replaced rather than repaired.



If the motor sounds sluggish when turning over, you may have the wrong weight motor oil for the season. You will especially become aware of this in cold weather. The starter operates sluggishly, the lights go dim and there is a heavy drag on the current when you are starting your engine — these are signs that your oil weight is too heavy for weather conditions. The obvious solution is to use an all-weather weight oil such as 10W30.

If you've eliminated all of the above, your car may fail to start because of a dying, dead or poorly connected battery. The fastest way to check your battery is to turn on your headlights. If the beams are bright, your battery is sending an adequate electrical charge. With a dying or dead battery, they'll be dim or out.

If you suspect battery trouble, look at the cable connections. Are they secure? Are they free of corrosion? If these check out, your battery may be low and you'll need to "jump start" your car and go to a service center. Jumper cables need to be hooked up properly, and they need to send the charge from a booster battery of the same voltage. If you have a small or foreign-built car, be sure to check the booster battery's voltage before attempting a jump start. Too high a voltage will burn out your car's electrical system. Also, be sure to turn on the lights and accessories before disconnecting the booster cables. This prevents a high surge of voltage and possible electrical burnout of your car's regulator.

Here are a few tips about starting your car after you have flooded it with gasoline or when starting it in cold weather. Tip one: If the car has accidentally been flooded, you will smell gasoline fumes from the over-saturated carburetor. Wait a few minutes for some gasoline to evaporate. Then depress the accelerator pedal to the floor and hold it there while starting the engine. Do NOT pump the pedal. Do NOT overtax the starter or battery. The sound of the car turning over will tell press the gas pedal to the floor and release it. Turn the key and start your engine. When it starts, you'll probably experience a high idle speed. Tap the accelerator sharply to reduce the idle speed to normal.

What to do when your car won't stop!

Chances are, everyone who has driven for any length of time has experienced the frustration of an engine that refuses to shut down. It continues to cough, chatter and rock after you turn off the ignition switch and remove the key. Your first reaction is to sit there and stare at the dashboard instruments in disbelief. Your second reaction might be to kick the accelerator sharply. At this point, the engine usually stops.

If your car won't stop, the solution may be a very simple one. Change to a higher octane fuel the next time you fill up the tank. This should stop "after-run" or "dieseling" as it is called. The cause is an improper air/fuel mixture setting on the carburetor or the spark timing. Therefore, changing to a higher grade of gasoline usually solves this problem.

Newer model cars are especially prone to after-run and dieseling. This is due to changes in design. Emission controls and provision for more output to run accessories make newer cars run hotter. As a result, your newer model may cause you great irritation by dieseling. If switching to a higher octane gasoline doesn't cure the problem, visit your dealer or service center for a checkup.

A new line of European subcompacts!

The Dodge Aries, restyled for the first time since its introduction five years ago, and a completely new series of imported subcompact Dodge Colts headline the lineup of passenger cars from the Dodge division of Chrysler Corporation for 1985.

"The new Aries and the Colts are all part of the continuing Dodge revolution," said Joseph N. Caddell, General Marketing Manager-Dodge, "a revolution that began with the Dodge Daytona, the world's first front wheel drive turbo-powered sports car, and continued with the Dodge Caravan, the unbelievably successful multi-purpose vehicle.

"We've given the Aries dramatic new aerodynamic styling, upgraded the interior and added a new top-of-the-line Aries LE Model. This should further expand the appeal of this highly popular line of compact two-door and four-door sedans.

"The new Colts, imported for Dodge from Mitsubishi Motors Corporation, are completely new from the ground up for 1985 with outstanding aerodynamics, distinctive new look and super-size windows to give it the best field of view for cars in its class," he said.

Other models featured in the 1983 Dodge lineup include a Dodge 600 ES Turbo Convertible and a turbo-powered version of the Shelby Charger two-door sporty hatchback.

"All other models offered by Dodge for 1985 have undergone engineering and styling changes that represent consistent evolution in product quality," Caddell said.

DODGE ARIES

The front-wheel drive Dodge Aries compact sedan and wagon line gets a contemporary European-inspired look for 1985.

A new front end with new grille incorporating the Chrysler Pentastar design, new halogen headlamps, integral flashing side marker lights, and new bumper treatments are included in the styling changes.

The interior of the 1985 Aries has been restyled, too, with new door trim panels with right and left hand door map pockets, soft-textured padded instrument panel and a driver-oriented instrument layout.

Two new mid-priced SE two-door and four-door sedans have been added to the Aries family, expanding the line to six sedans and two wagons selling in standard Aries, mid-priced Aries SE or top-of-the-line Aries LE prices classes.

DODGE OMNI

The Dodge Omni four-door sub-compacts feature several styling and engineering improvements for 1985, and includes the GLH sports-performance package.

The Omni front-wheel drive comes in two price classes, the basic Omni, with European-inspired black trim and the upgraded Omni SE which features bright ornamentation. Engines available include the standard 1.6-liter four-cylinder, or an optional 2.2-liter four-cylinder engine.

The Omni with GLH package, introduced late in the 1984 model year, features a special high output 2.2-liter engine that develops 110 horsepower and a high-speed close ratio manual transaxle. Also included are front air dam, performance suspension system and other high quality features.

DODGE CHARGER

A Shelby Charger with a turbo engine adds to the Dodge Charger line for 1985, increasing the excitement of this sporty two-door hatchback family.

The Shelby Charger for 1985 features muscular 2.2-liter electronic fuel injected and turbo-charged engine which develops a robust 146 horsepower. Special high performance suspension system, "Turbo Bulge" hood, 14-inch aluminum wheels and Unidirectional performance tread tires are among other Shelby Charger features.

The standard Charger model comes with a 1.6-liter four-cylinder engine. The Charger 2.2 model features a high-output 2.2-liter engine that develops 110 horsepower.

DODGE 600

The Dodge 600 line has been expanded for 1985 to cover a wider range of customers.

The 600 SE Turbo Convertible highlights the line, which includes a two-door coupe, two-door convertible and four-door sedan.

The 600 ES Turbo Convertible features a 2.2-liter electronic fuel injected and turbocharged engine, performance suspension system, leather front bucket seats and electronic instrument cluster.

The standard engine on other 600 models is a 2.2-liter with electronic fuel injection. The turbo-charged engine can be ordered as an option, as can a 2.6-liter Mitsubishi four-cylinder engine.

DODGE CARAVAN

An overwhelming sales success in its introductory year, the unique Dodge Caravan multi-purpose vehicle has been further refined for the 1985 model year.

Available in five- or seven-passenger versions, the Caravan may be equipped this year with a convert-a-bed option, which converts the rear seats into an adult-size double bed. Other new options include a new front storage bin and console and, on the premium LE model, an overhead console.

The only front-wheel-drive passenger wagon of its class in America, the Caravan boasts amazing maneuverability, parking ease and value.

DODGE DIPLOMAT

The popular six-passenger rear-wheel drive Dodge Diplomat features new engineering and styling touches for 1985, including improved engine efficiency.

The Diplomat's 5.3-liter, V-8 engine was modified to improve combustion and reduce internal friction, resulting in an indicated eight percent improvement in fuel economy.

This four-door mid-size is available in Diplomat Salon and upgraded Diplomat SE models.

DODGE DAYTONA

The Dodge Daytona, America's first front-wheel drive turbo-charged sports car, has new styling and engineering touches for 1985 to make it even more attractive to performance enthusiasts.

A new three-spoked Euro-style steering wheel is featured, as are new road wheels and maintenance free battery.

Coming later in the 1985 model year is an optional Shelby handling package for the Daytona Turbo, which will feature four-wheel disc brakes, 15-inch cast aluminum wheels and other performance components. A T-bar roof package will also be available later in the model year.

IMPORT LINEUP

The 1985 Colt has been completely redesigned for 1985, and a four-door notchback sedan has been added to the two-door and five-door hatchbacks in this line of best selling imported subcompacts.

The new Colts have very low wind drag, and feature flush fitted and semi-flush fitted glass, a more powerful 1.5-liter engine that gets the same fuel economy as earlier models, triple-sealed doors with concealed drip rails, and a host of other features which make this car virtually 'new from the ground up.'

The 1985 Conquest three-door liftback grand touring sports coupe features an aerodynamic-styled body with flush-fit bumpers, retracting headlamps, doors, lift handles and center-post trim.

The 2.5-liter turbocharged engine features twin electronically-controlled injectors and a water cooled bearing housing.

The standard transmission is a fully-synchronized manual five-speed overdrive unit. An electronically-controlled four-speed automatic transmission is an option.

The new Colts have low wind drag... and more powerful engines.

PONTIAC — An all new driver's coupe for the mid-80s

The 1985 Grand Am debuts as an all-new "sports specialty coupe" - a car to be known for innovative styling and engineering, with traditional Pontiac roadability and performance.

As the latest in a new generation of road cars from Pontiac, Grand Am will occupy a high-volume niche in the expanding new car market of the mid-80's. Built on a 103.4-inch wheelbase, Grand Am's overall length of 177.5 inches is about two inches longer than the Pontiac Sunbird and approximately a foot shorter than the Pontiac 6000.

"We had two clear objectives when we designed and planned the car," said Terry Henline, Grand Am's chief exterior designer. "We intended to merge the qualities of a strong, sport road car with special appeal to today's upscale contemporary market. Combining a sporty road feel with the distinctive interior and exterior styling were the guiding features throughout Grand Am's development. It's a new kind of image car for Pontiac!"

Grand Am powertrain combinations range from a new electronic fuel-injected 2.5-liter four-cylinder engine called "Tech IV," and equipped with five-speed manual or three-speed automatic transmission to a performance-oriented 125 horsepower, multi-port fuel-injected 3.0-liter V-6 engine and automatic transmission. A special rally handling suspension package (Y99), available with both powerplants, is engineered to offer precise roadability characteristics for the enthusiast driver.

"Grand Am will compete head-to-head with up-scale imports," Henline said. "It is specifically designed to appeal to the new values consumer; a young, more sophisticated, better educated buyer, who wants overall performance and roadability, but expects superior workmanship, dependability and durability in a contemporary, efficient design."

Available as a two-door coupe, the five-passenger Grand Am offers an entry-level model that combines outstanding roadability with sophisticated sportiness. The up-level LE is a more personal version with expressive styling, interior appointments and a variety of optional features.

Exterior

Grand Am has qualities that fit both the sport and specialty designations.

The car's sculptured aerodynamic lines and smooth curves give it a distinguished sports car flavor while the contemporary split-grille design identifies Grand Am as a true Pontiac.

"The tapered hood line slopes back to the flush-fitting, aerodynamically raked windshield," Henline said. "Optional 14-inch Hi-Tech turbo cast aluminum wheels and 215/60 Goodyear Eagle GT tires give Grand Am an aggressive wide track stance on the road."

The distinctive front end design includes quad rectangular headlamps with halogen high beams and wrap-around neutral density side marker lamps complement the dramatic grille. An integral front air dam is standard and optional fog lamps may be mounted to the lower front fascia.

The roof line flows in to the flush-fitting convex rear window, adding to the car's formal appearance.

"A major element of the Grand Am design features a "horizontal wrap" theme, utilizing a six-inch protective ribbed side molding with matching wrap-around bumper fascias," adds Henline. "The molding adds a visual focal point to the lower part of the Grand Am that enhances the solid appearance of the car. It's functional as well as beautifully detailed."

Standard on LE and optional on entry level Grand Ams, the horizontal ribbed bumpers with integral body side moldings ae color-coordinated with the exterior of the car.

Quality Story

Pontiac's 1985 Grand Am is not the only new kid on the block; much assembly technology was developed to produce the new sports specialty coupe as the division continues to meet stringent quality goals.

Extensive training has prepared employees to meet the quality standards for the Grand Am program at the GM plant in Lansing, Michigan. The quality process has been further heightened by assembly plant teams involved in prototype and complete pilot vehicle assembly.

Grand Am manufacturing and assembly uses advanced robot technology to insure consistent body dimensional control. A master body "cube" and optical sensor are used for fast, accurate checking of metal and plastic surfaces. An Automatic Guided Vehicle System (AGVS) is then used in final assembly for engine dress, drivetrain load and exhaust and brake system load and fill. The AGVS permits greater operator control of critical jobs.

Car loans don't have to be a mysterious process

Now is the time of year when many of us are buying new and used cars. This means that it is also the time of year when we must apply for loans to pay for our new cars. People often apply for a loan with a good deal of uncertainty and even a little fear. It sometimes seems that the lender wants to know everything about us and then won't give us the loan unless we can prove we don't need it.

There is no need to be fearful when applying for a loan. After all, the lender is in business to lend money, he wants you to get the loan. Understanding the loan process can make one more confident when applying for a loan and can even improve your chances of getting it

When you apply for a loan you must provide a substantial amount of information about yourself, including your income and debts and a schedule of your assets. Whatever income is listed on the application should be verifiable and, it is often a good idea to bring along pay stubs or a copy of last years income tax form when you make out the application. You must fill out the application completely and accurately, particularly when listing your debts. The lender will use this information to obtain a credit report from a credit bureau and, eventually, to determine whether or not you get the loan.

The lender will use the listing of your debt to calculate whether or not you can afford to pay the loan. Usually, the total of all monthly installment payments, including your mortgage or rent, should not exceed 35-40% of your income before taxes. Keep in mind that the lender will subtract the payment for any car loan that will be paid off by your selling your car, but the new payment for the loan you have requested will be added in. You may list salary, tips, alimony, child support, dividends, interest and most any other type of income and have it considered processing your loan application. The income of your husband or wife cannot be considered unless they are a signer on the loan.

A credit report from the credit bureau is a normal part of the loan process. The lender can determine from this report if you have listed all your debts and what kind of loan payment history you have had in the past. A history of prompt payment of previous and current loans can help a great deal in getting a new loan. If you have had problems with paying your loans in the past you may find that it is now very difficult to obtain new credit. It may be helpful to explain the circumstances of any past problems if they were caused by things beyond your control such as illness or unemployment.

A first time borrower or someone with a limited credit history may be asked to obtain a cosigner. What this means is that the lender wants you to have someone else assume equal responsibility for the loan with you. The cosigner must complete an application and will be examined for credit, ability to pay and all other credit standards just as the signer will be. Should the loan be late or delinquent the cosigner may be required to pay what is owed.

What about interest rates? It is very difficult for the average person to compare interest rates. It is much easier to compare the monthly payments for a loan of a given amount for a given amount of time. For example: A loan of $6000.00 for four years at 14.0% has a monthly payment of only $163.96 per month while the same loan at 12.5% has a payment of only $159.48 per month. The difference of $4.48 per month may seem like very little but it totals $215.04 over the four years of the loan. Another type of loan to be aware of is a type that has only recently appeared. This type of loan has very low monthly payments but a payment of as much as $3000.00 to $4000.00 as the final payment 4.5 years later.

When you are deciding where you should apply for a loan you have many choices, including banks, credit unions and the finance divisions of the Auto manufacturers. Perhaps the first place to call is your own bank or credit union. It may be more convenient for you to do all your banking in one place and the lender knows you and may be more willing to finance your car. It is easy to check the loan interest rates in your area by telephone and it is a good idea. You will probably discover that the rates are all about the same as this is a very competitive business. Should you find that one rate is a good deal lower than the others it may be because the lender is trying to build business by attracting new customers in this way.the most usual source of such low rates is through the Auto companies however, check carefully as the low rate may only apply to certain models or for a limited time.

Auto loans may be obtained for up to five years on new cars with the most common new car loan being four years. On used cars the usual term is three years although on newer models you may be able to finance for four years. The "standard" down payment requirement is 20% but it is now possible to finance a car with as little as $100.00 down. A smaller down payment or a longer term on the loan will often mean a higher interest rate. The borrower must decide if the higher rate is too high a price to pay for a lower payment or a smaller amount of cash up front. It is important that you take a payment that you can afford comfortably as the closer the payment is to the maximum you can afford, then the greater the likelihood of you falling behind should any unforseen problem develop. The longer the loan is extended for the greater the amount of interest you will pay. The best thing to do is to take the shortest loan you can reasonably afford.

The lender will require you to obtain additional insurance coverage on a car being used as collateral. You must carry fire theft and collision coverage to assure the lender that the loan will be paid even if the car is totaled. Do not confuse this type of insurance with Credit Life Insurance and Disability Insurance offered by the lender as part of the loan payment. Credit Life and Disability Insurance is to protect you and your family from having a debt burden if you should die or be disabled. This costs a small amount extra each month depending on the amount of the loan and is a borrower option. The insurance on the car is through your insurance agent and is required. This auto insurance protects against loss of the car.

Remember that the applicant with decent credit, adequate income and a reasonable downpayment will usually be granted his or her loan. If this is a description of you then any lender will be happy to see you in his office.

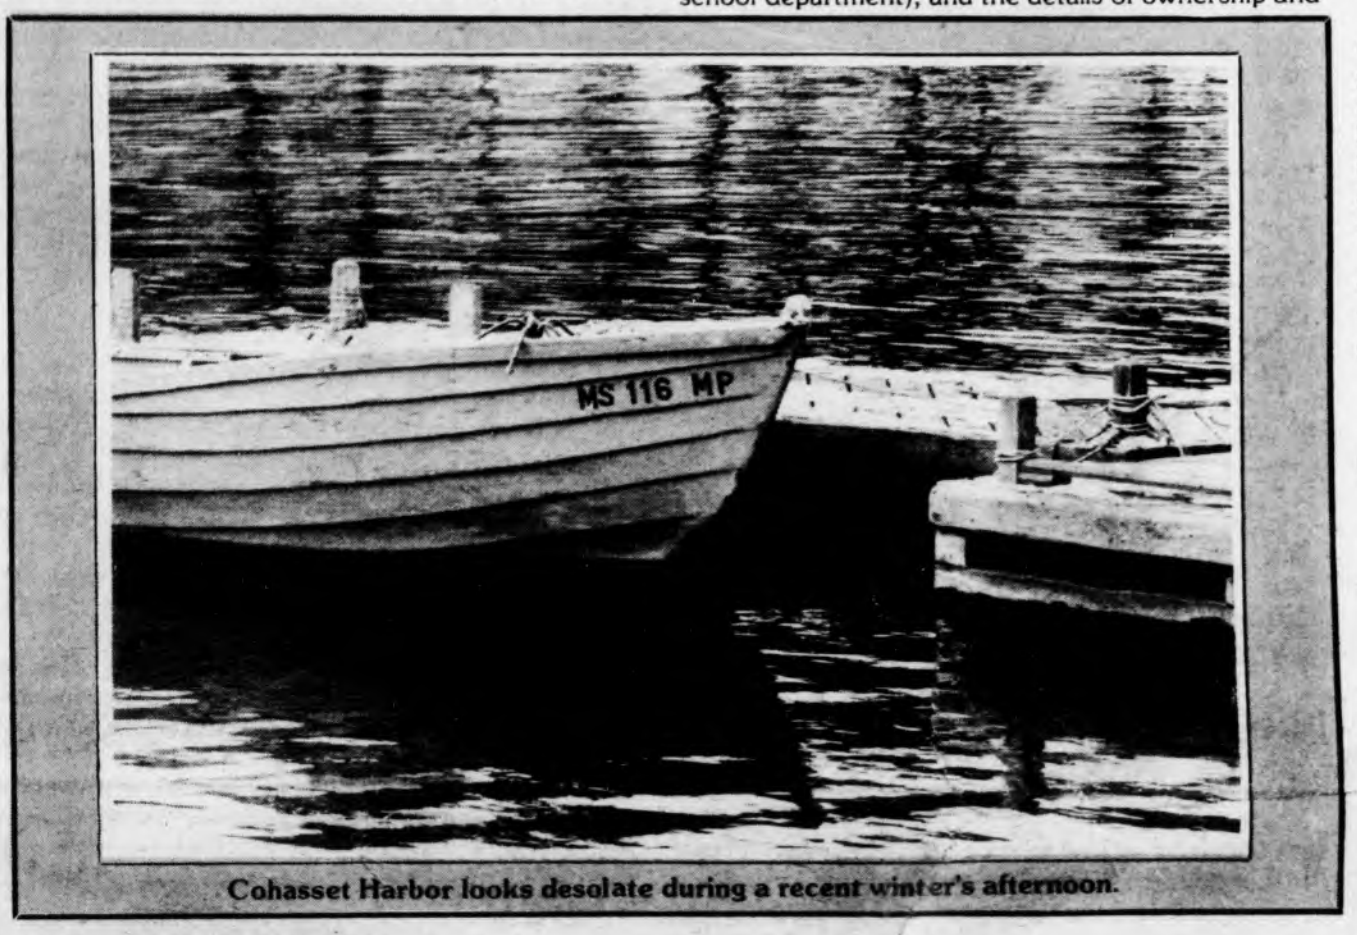
Town looks to 3A land to construct new garage

By Jane Lane

The Municipal Garage Committee is recommending the town appropriate $50,000 to design a facility in which town-owned vehicles will be stored.

Although no specific site has been acquired, the town is looking at a piece of land located within a 70-acre parcel off Route 3A. That property, which is under the jurisdiction of selectmen for future use by the school department, is situated in the back of Sohier Street to Smith Place and westerly to Route 3A.



The school department has not been notified of this proposal and therefore has made no decision whether to authorize transfer of any land to the town, according to Supt. Eugene Crowell. In a Jan. 14 letter to the garage committee, selectmen stated "it is our understanding that some of the land in this area is town land (not school department), and the details of ownership and location will need to be explored."

The garage committee, appointed a year ago by selectmen to study the need for a municipal storage facility, voted last week to submit an article in the April Town Meeting warrant. The article requests the town's approval to develop plans and specifications to construct a new town garage and to appropriate $50,000 for architectural and engineering fees for the development of those plans.

In a report issued to selectmen two months ago, it was estimated that the price of a 21,000 square foot garage would cost $50,000 for the engineering fees, $100,000 for land development, and $505,000 for the building. The total cost of the land and storage facility, including all insurance and bonding costs, is estimated at $785,000, using 1984 costs, the committee concluded.

Although Supt. Crowell explained the school committee has yet to receive any proposal to locate a garage on the school property, he noted that construction of a garage facility would be an asset to the school depart-

Chief fires up for new truck

Calling it a public safety hazard, Fire Chief Martin Dooley warned selectmen that if a new fire engine is not purchased this year, the current one will collapse.

In an emotional exchange with selectmen Tuesday night, Chief Dooley said the 12 year-old engine is "past the point of repair" and the town must buy a replacement. Selectmen do not contend that point, but they explained that a $125,000 appropriation request must be carefully documented. And because the town only has about $80,000 left in the stabilization fund to purchase such large acquisitions, an alternative must be explored.

Chief Dooley explained that engine four has been plagued by problems, long before he was appointed to the department. "It's been a lemon since day one," he told selectmen, unlike another engine truck in the department which is 23 years old and in better working condition.

But when Selectman Rocco Laugelle said he heard the chief has ordered his men "to run it into the ground, then we'll get a new one," the discussion became heated. "You never heard that from me," Chief Dooley shot back. "You must have heard it from someone else in the department."

The chief then noted he was "not about to beg" for the $125,000 appropriation request. "It's not for me, or the department. It's for the town," he stated.

The engine truck has had a long history of repairs and maintenance. Often, the chief said, the truck must be sent out to Woodwood Spring in Quincy for extensive work. One of the latest repairs was a complete brake job for a total of $1600, he added.

When asked by Selectman Frank England why more of the repairs aren't handled by the department's mechanic, the chief replied that he is not equipped to do many of the more complicated procedures. A brake job requires lifts for the engine, he explained, and the department does not have that equipment.

Although selectmen repeatedly emphasized they were sympathetic to the chief's request, they explained he must have complete details to document his argument before the Advisory Committee and the Capital Outlay Committee.

"That'll be a waste of time," Chief Dooley yelled. Despite his argument, selectmen urged the chief to compile a list of the repairs made to the engine the past two or three years, all the facts and figures which would be needed to put the truck back into condition, and all information pertaining to a lease-purchase arrangement.

"I know the truck is falling apart," Selectman Mary Jane McArthur stated," but you need backup for your argument."

When the chief repeatedly stated his belief that going before the Advisory Committee would be a waste of time, Selectman Frank England reminded him, "but if you want the truck, this is the route you have to take."

The chief explained how engine four is currently being "held together by a shoe string." In the past month, three and a half gallons of oil have been used to keep it running. He explained that the engine is made of "bad steel" imported from Japan, and exposure to salt water during the 1978 Blizzard hastened its corrosion. Workmen at Woodwood Spring informed the chief after the latest repair, that the truck is "beyond replacement."

Although the chief said he was personally opposed to a lease-purchase plan, he would look into the details. He said these arrangements often double the sale price of the vehicle. But selectmen noted since there is limited funds available, that may be the only option.

Selectmen then urged the chief to go to the Advisory Committee, armed with his facts and figures regarding the disabled truck. "I'm not going to beg anyone. If they won't support it, I'm just as disgusted as everyone else," he said.

In other related action, selectmen voted to allow payment of a bill to purchase the fire department's new ambulance. Town Meeting in June appropriated $50,000 for the new vehicle, but there was a delay in the ordering process and the manufacture.

Selectmen authorized payment of $46,990 which included the trade-in of the used ambulance vehicle. The ambulance is expected to be on the road by the end of this week.

Computers free library staff

It's a known fact that the Paul Pratt Library is one of the most popular and widely-used libraries in the state. But, like all libraries, it's finances have been tightened, and its services have been limited accordingly.

As Library Director Richard Hayes notes, funding for public libraries is on the decline. With an increasing national budget deficit, appropriating dwindling funds for the purchase of books is not a high priority of the present administration.

In an effort to meet this fiscal challenge, several local libraries have developed a cooperative plan to ensure the survival of their facilities. Hayes,who for the past five years has been instrumental in coordinating this development, will be requesting $50,000 to participate in the Old Colony Library Network.

What this 15-town network will provide is a step into the future for Cohasset. With the assistance of computers, access to about two million books will be available to Cohasset's library users. Although the Pratt Library currently contains about 40,000 volumes, the regional network will provide Cohasset readers with titles previously unattainable. With the touch of a computer keyboard, a Cohasset reader will know if a certain book is available and its location. An immediate request can be made for that title and it will be transferred to the Pratt Library, usually within 24 hours.

The advisory committee noted in its review of the annual library budget that for the past four years, library trustees have towed the line and limited acquisition of new books and expansion of services and staff. It's the library's time to think about the future, advisors have said. They are awaiting a review of this appropriation request from the Capital Budget Committee before they record their support or denial of the library's request.

Cohasset's week . . .

Non permitted business

Building Inspector Edward Poskus has ordered a home business to cease operation until a zoning bylaw variance has been issued to the owner.

In a letter dated Feb. 11, Poskus ordered John Kenyon to cease his business located within his home at 5 Diab Lane. The business, "America at Leisure," is a telemarketing corporation, according to owner Kenyon.

The owner said he was scheduled to apply Tuesday for a variance. In the meantime, he is continuing to operate the business which consists of three persons working within the home. Kenyon explained that it is a telephone business only; no clients or customers are on the site at any time. The telemarketing operation includes trade promotions accomplished exclusively on the telephone.

The business has been in operation at the location for about a month, according to Kenyon.

In the letter to the owner, Poskus explained that business use of the property exceeds a home occupation and therefore a bylaw variance is required.

Legislation to reduce SEMASS costs

Cities and towns throughout the South Shore and Cape Cod will be receiving state reimbursement to offset the cost of Resource Recovery contracts, if legislation filed by Representative John H. Flood (D-Canton) becomes law.

Under the new legislation, the state would be required to reimburse cities and towns for any additional cost incurred as a result of a change in government policy relative to Resource Recovery Facilities.

In December, after 20 South Shore towns had signed contracts, the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering announced that the proposed SEMASS Resource Recovery Facility in Rochester would be required to add acid gas controls before the plant would be granted a final permit. That decision could cost communities millions of dollars in increased disposal fees.

Calling the acid gas control "an untested, unproven and virtually non-existent technology," Flood charges, "There is no Resource Recovery Facility in America with acid gas controls. What the state is trying to do is demonstrate its token commitment to the environment at the expense of the already overburdened cities and towns." That burden he said, is being placed on the very same communities that have demonstrated the depth of their commitment by abandoning the environmentally hazardous landfill for the modern and more expensive waste to energy concept.

"Now the state penalizes these most environmentally conscious communities by increasing their municipal budget for refuse disposal so it can score points with the environmentalists," Flood concluded.

According to SEMASS President George Malling, Energy Answers Corporation is still studying the technical options of acid gas controls with the Bechtel Corporation, the prime contractor for the SEMASS Project. While the available options still fall within an added cost of from $4 to $9 per ton of waste, SEMASS expects to be able to narrow this range in the near future.

School roof permits

Supt. of School Eugene Crowell has informed the two roofing firms working on school roof repairs that building permit fees for the work could be doubled, according to a recommendation from the Building Inspector.

Supt. Crowell, in a letter to Titan Roofing and MacDonald Sprague Roofing Co., said unless payment for the fees is to be immediately subtracted from the final payment, the fees will be doubled by the town.

If the two companies did not respond to the Superintendent's request, "you will leave me no course of action but to turn the situation back to Mr. Poskus and the Board of Selectmen for whatever other action they may take."

According to Inspector Poskus, MacDonald Sprague Co. submitted their application for the permit by the Friday deadline last week. He did not receive the application and check from Titan Roofing until Tuesday, Feb. 19, past the required deadline.

Poskus said the firm owes the town $1900 for roofing work at the high school. The permit for the Deer Hill School work will cost MacDonald Sprague $635.

Because of the late arrival of the application and check, Poskus said he will talk to selectmen about the next course of action. Selectmen had recommended last week that all work be stopped until the situation was resolved.

Nominations filed for public office

This week, interest in taking out nomination papers to run for elected office has remained low.

Kathleen Conte has filed a notice of intent to run for a four-year term on the Housing Authority.

Barbara Bliss has filed for a three-year term on the School Committee.

Deborah Eaton has filed a notice of intent to run for a five-year term on the Recreation Commission.

Dog ordered removed from town

After hearing testimony from a neighbor and Animal Control Officer Richard Yokum, selectmen ordered a dog owned by William Malley of Elm Court removed from town.

Complaints about the agressive nature of a husky-type dog owned by Malley have been forwarded to selectmen and the Animal Control officer since 1982. The latest incident occurred Feb. 6, 1985, when the husky and another dog owned by the Malleys, killed two rabbits owned by Clifford Dixon. Dixon, who appeared before selectmen Tuesday night, said it was the husky who killed the rabbits, by getting inside the hutch. The other dog, a labrador owned by the Malleys, was simply following the lead of the aggressive companion, he said.

Malley offered no excuse to selectmen, and said the dog "is guilty as charged." He said he would remove the dog, if so ordered by selectmen. He also "pleaded for mercy of the court" to save his other dog. He assured selectmen will continue to restrain that dog.

Selectmen agreed they had no choice but to have the husky removed, noting that he had intimidated several neighbors for many years, including a young newspaper delivery girl. They voted to give the black labrador dog "one more chance," warning the owner to keep the animal restrained at all times.

Civil service status

Selectmen have asked the Government Structure Committee's recommendation on a proposal to take the Town Accountant's position out of Civil Service status.

Emphasizing that the possible move will not affect present Accountant William Signorelli. selectmen said they support an article in the Town Meeting article which would remove the job from Civil Service. The position would then become a contract position, similar to the Executive Secretary's job.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said she preferred taking the staff position out of Civil Service, but after studying the proposal, she discovered the it would have to be voted by Town Meeting.

Selectmen decided that space for an article could be reserved while they await the Government Structure Committee's recommendation. Their recommendation will be presented to selectmen at next Monday's meeting.

Car license for 3A firm

Selectmen voted Tuesday night to grant a used car sales license to Kent Wonnell, owner of European Car Connections, located on Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

What Wonnell will be doing, he explained to selectmen, is to store not more than six cars at a time, on the Randy's Mobil Station property at 190 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. An arrangment has been worked out between the service station owner and Wonnell, he explained. In effect, Wonnell will be using the special permit to store vehicles that was previously granted the service station owner.

After checking the details, Town Counsel Richard Henderson said there would be no problem allowing one business owner to use a special permit issued to an owner at another location. Selectmen voted unanimously to grant the license, with the understanding that if more than, six vehicles are stored at Randy's station, his special permit will be in jeopardy.

Wonnell began a computerized customer-car matchup service in Cohasset in April, 1983. The name of that firm is Car Connections Ltd. Wonnell explained that for a one-time charge of $39.95 to the auto seller, his car will be matched up with a buyer who has submitted his name and car preference to the company. Through computers, the buyer and seller are matched, similar to the computerized dating system, he explained.

A Cohasset resident, Wonnell said his Car Connections business expanded into a second operation this past December, called European Car Connections. This business links buyers up with prestigious vehicles infrequently found in this country, such as Mercedes and Rolls Royce. Through the same computer matchup process, the buyer and seller are connected and the sale is made electronically.

Both of Wonnell's businesses, which employ about ten people, are located at 194 Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

He found there was a growing need to store a few vehicles on the premises, for clients who would like to view a potential purchase, for cars just imported and waiting for pickup, and for those vehicles which were not accepted upon delivery.

Because there is no storage facility at the 194 Chief Justice Cushing site, Wonnell completed the arrangement to store the vehicles at Randy's.

"Our intention is to do business in a way the car business has not been done before," he said. "We want to be as unobtrusive as possible. Everything is handled by phone or by mail. Our office is for appointments only. There are no cars for sale out front, no banners. We do not intend to have many cars on Randy's property, that's not our method of operation."

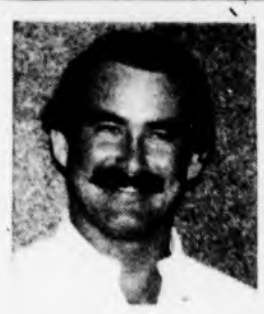
Wonnell also noted that no maintenance work will be done to the cars at the Cohasset location. It will simply be a place in which the vehicles will be stored. Most cars will be stored on the property for only a few days until they are claimed by their owner, he added.

"We want to be regarded as a nice, clean-cut operation. So far, we've been an asset to the community and we plan to keep doing that," Wonnell said.

A review of town growth

Cohasset, along with other towns on the South Shore, is experiencing considerable growth. The League of Women Voters of Cohasset is holding a meeting which will be open to the public, Thursday, Feb. 28 at 7:30 p.m. in the Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main Street, Cohasset on the effects of growth on the Town.

A feature of the evening will be a slide show produced by the League in the early 1970's. Growth in Cohasset: Choice or Chance. The show includes scenes of Cohasset and interviews with residents about the effect of the changes going on in the 1970's. Christine Bassett, Chair of the Cohasset Planning Board will describe some of the growth trends and the board's proposed changes to the zoning by-law.



Thomas Cook who is a member of the Drainage Committee and the Watershed Study Committee will discuss the work of those two committees and the proposed Drainage by-law. A realtor from the community will talk about real estate trends in town, housing needs and the "new sellers beware" legislation.

THE OLD HAWAII

Most people who dream of Hawaii as a remote paradise are disenchanted by their initial experience on Oahu, the urban center of the state. However, the best-kept secret in the Islands is the North Shore, windward Oahu. Here, you can still sun and snorkel in seclusion along pristine stretches of deserted white beach. Dine by candlelight on the veranda of an elegant inn and enjoy Polynesian drinks at sunset while surfers battle giant waves. Luxuriate in a moonlit suite in a first-class hotel with the soothing sounds of waves outside your lanai. In short, the North Shore is Hawaii as you might have imagined. It is only 40 minutes from Honolulu; close enough to head into town for dinner.

When planning a vacation there are so many ways in which you can save money. First, many carriers offer special rates or travel packages unknown to the lay person. CHS proposal adds time to class schedule

Cohasset High School students may be spending more time in the classroom next year. At a meeting Feb. 13, the school committee discussed plans for possible schedule changes.

Changes would include lengthening classes to 45 minutes, increasing passing time between classes from four to five minutes, decreasing the number of lunch periods from three to two, and eliminating the rotating class schedule, allowing for double period lab courses.

Presently three lunch periods are held back-to-back in the cafeteria. Under the new schedule, there would be two 30-minute lunch periods. According to high school Principal Dick Streeter, lunches would be served in the cafeteria and in the large study hall adjacent to the cafeteria. This system would allow for a 20-minute clean-up period between lunches.

In the rotating class system, courses are offered at different periods each day throughout a six-day cycle. Eliminating the rotating system would make the daily order of classes consistent, accommodating two-period lab classes, and extracurricular activities.

Streeter told the committee that he would have predictions within the month as to the effect these changes would have upon the students.

In other business, student school committee presented a report on a conference they recently attended.

According to student committee member Ingrid Anderson, the conference, entitled "Building Student Leadership in Schools," stressed the importance of student input in the school's decision making process.

Student representatives from several schools, including those from some of the larger area schools, such as Walpole attended the conference. According to student Jay Contis, the committees from these larger schools seemed to "have more power." "It's our education," said Contis. "We should be able to propose new ideas for consideration." Superintendent Crowell agreed, adding that to his knowledge no student had ever been denied the right to be heard.

"Students don't really think about the fact that they can have a say," said committee member Jack Langmain. He suggested that an effort be made to increase student awareness and participation.

To this end, committee chairman Joseph Nedrow said that student representatives will be given an agenda and additional information each Thursday or Friday prior to the Monday meetings.

These packets will enable the students to prepare for the meetings and to gain input from the rest of the student body.

Dr. Robert McCarthy, principal of Brookline High School, was the keynote speaker at the conference.

McCarthy, said Contis, told the representatives that "school is not as much of a democracy as you would like to think it is." He supported this idea with the example of the hall pass which students must use at school, but not at their places of work.

Committee member Martha Gjestaby pointed out that the school is legally responsible for the whereabouts of the students during the school day.

Student committee member Mike DeSantis also reported on a workshop he attended which was designed to help students understand their schools' budgets. He felt it was important that students know where school monies come from and go to.

"I never had any sense of what you guys were talking about," he quipped.

The workshop explained how schools obtain money through city funds, grants, and state reimbursements.

More budget reviews by advisors

By Lisa J. Messersmith

The Advisory Committee approved a total of $447,353 for the Police Dept. budget, Tuesday, Feb. 19. Included within the general expense amount of $49,425 are $6,000 for repair and maintenance of police vehicles which average 90,000 miles per year and $500 for photo supplies.

The Police Dept. also intended to hire a full-time civilian clerk/dispatcher for $12,600, but the advisory committee voted to wait on this issue until the fall, when contract negotiations will take place. Although many of the members feel clerical help would be beneficial to the department, they believe the work could be done by a part-time person.

The Advisory Committee also voted to defer further action on the Water Department budget until further discussion with the department personnel.

The Water Dept. had asked for $8,418 for emergency duty overtime, but "it is the considered opinion of the subcommittee to not let them get more than last year," member Tom Burke said. "They should be running that place at a profit. We should reduce that budget and let them live with it." Member Jill O'Connell plans to contact Water Dept. officials this week.

Another issue involving the Water Dept. was the $27,000 increase in the already-apporved $50,400 budget for hydrant services. The Water Dept. wants to charge the town approximately $300 for each of the 255 hydrants which need to be replaced or installed.

Chairman Jacqueline Dormitzer contacted the Norwell, Hanson, and Duxbury Water Departments and found that the money needed to finance their additional hydrants comes from the revenue from the Town Water Departments. Consequently, the members voted ment. According to the report filed by the garage committee in December, the school department would request enough space to house ten school buses, three vans, one truck, and one automobile with the facility.

Town to ask for garage facility

In a letter to selectmen last week, the garage committee asked Town Counsel's advise as to what portion of the Sohier Street site, if any, is available for general use. "It would appear the land is held by the selectmen for school purposes," Chairman Tom Duggan stated in the correspondence.

In addition he noted, "we would like to point out that, due to the site configuration, the distance from Route 3A to the buildable portion of this property may require site development; that is, access road and utilities."

The garage committee filed an extensive report with selectmen in December in which they explained the process in locating a recommended site. A questionnaire was completed by town departments. Although the committee searched for available existing buildings, none were found adequate.

As for land, four sites were presented for selectmen's review, including a proposed location behind the Red Lion Inn, four acres of land off King Street, north of Jonathan Livingston Square on Route 3A, the "so-called school department land", and the gravel pit land opposite the westerly end of Red Gate Lane, and backing up to the Little League field.

After reviewing the four proposals, selectmen determined that the 70 acres behind Sohier Street was the most viable location. They did not support a downtown location, the potential 3A location presented hazardous traffic problems, and the gravel pit could raise serious pollution issues, they stated in a letter to the garage committee.

According to the committee's report, the following town departments would require a specific number of square feet of space for office and storage of vehicles: Wire Department, 288 square feet for one aerial truck; Highway Department, 2456 square feet for five dump trucks, one pick up truck, one sidewalk plow, one backhoe, one truck and one loader; School Department, 5088 square feet for 10 school buses, three vans, one truck and one auto. The gross total of square footage needed for a municipal garage would be 20,840, including space for vehicle circulation, office and facilities.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson, who is in the process of writing the warrant articles for the April meeting, said he has received no information regarding the garage proposal.

School Supt. Crowell said no proposal has been forwarded to the school committee. He did add, however, that previous committees have traditionally rejected any proposal to use the land for anything other than school use. The property was set aside many years ago, before Crowell became superintendent, he said, for the express purpose of school expansion.

The Law and You

by Richard Price, Attorney-at-Law

CHILD SUPPORT

Parents must financially support their children. In most states, failure to do so is a crime and can bring contempt of court charges. In a divorce action, if there are children, support is always an issue. The amount of child support ordered usually depends on the needs of the children, their sources of income and the ability of the parents to pay. If there is a court hearing, the parent with custody will offer evidence showing the expenses for child rearing and his/her ability to pay for the child's support. The other parent submits a statement showing net worth, income and monthly living expenses. From this date, the judge makes a child support award. Judges consider child support a primary obligation. Other debts are considered subordinate to it.

If you have a legal question or think you may be faced with a legal problem, don't hesitate to consult with an attorney. Quite often some sound legal advice is all that is needed to solve a problem before it has to go to court. In any case, a phone call to an attorney might put your mind at ease. I handle all phases of general law including domestic problems, criminal cases, personal injury, and estate law. LAW OFFICES OF RICHARD PRICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Rt. 3A Cohasset, 383-9882. Call for an appointment.

"Morning's At Seven"

Playwright Paul Osborn began his professional career in 1928, wrote "Morning's At Seven" in 1939 and lived to see it become a Broadway hit and Best Play of the season in 1980.

"Morning's At Seven" is a gentle play, the story of two days in the lives of people who themselves are not in the morning of their lives, a fact of which they themselves are aware. And if not all seems right in the world when the curtain opens, it appears more right when it closes.

Osborn, writing when a young man, sympathetically and accurately portrayed a rural microcosm of a static midwestern village where two families have lived side-by-side for all their lives and have aged together. Several of Osborn's characters in "Morning's At Seven" are in their seventies, the author himself was eighty when his play first received the acclaim it deserved from audiences and critics alike.

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will present this American play on the Town Hall stage in Cohasset, March 1 through 3. Directing the production is Denise Ripley.

The Friday, March 1, and Saturday, March 2 performances are at 8 p.m. and the Sunday, March 3 performance is a matinee at 2 p.m.

Senior citizens are cordially invited to attend, without charge, the final dress rehearsal at 8 p.m. Thursday, February 28, and the Sunday, March 3, matinee.

Tickets are $4, available at the door at times of performance or in advance at Fleming's, Cohasset Center. Be sure to set aside the time to see one of the performances of this outstanding modern play set in the early years of the 20th century.

Three performance dates

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will present three performances of Paul Osborn's American play "Morning's At Seven" at the Cohasset Town Hall with play dates of Friday, March 1, Saturday, March 2 and Sunday, March 3. The Friday and Saturday performances are at 8 p.m., the Sunday performance is a matinee at 2 p.m.

Additionally, senior citizens are invited to attend at no charge the final dress rehearsal on Thursday, Feb. 28 and/or the Sunday matinee March 3.

For those needing tickets for "Morning's At Seven," they will be $4, available at the door at times of performance or in advance at Fleming's, Cohasset Center.

Childrens art courses

The South Shore Art Center offers two courses for children, An Experimental Workshop and Color, Texture and Shapes, both beginning in March.

The Experimental Workshop which was to be offered on Saturdays, has been moved to Thursdays from 4 to 5:30 p.m. starting March 14 and the Color, Texture and Shapes is offered Tuesdays from 4 to 5:30 beginning March 12. Both classes meet at the Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset and both require advanced registration.

The experimental workshop taught by Serena Brundige is geared for nine to twelve year olds and will work with Chinese paper sculpture, Japanese printmaking, Mexican weaving and African mask making. Color, texture and shapes, taught by Lisbeth Koopman-Wyman, is geared for six to eight year olds. Students will work with yarn stitchery, wax resist, masks, baker's clay sculpture and mobiles.

For further information contact the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

Invitational gallery exhibit

Two artists who have progressed from South Shore Art Center student to gallery artist are about to have their first major exhibit in the Center's invitational gallery.

An exhibit of works by Janet Blagdon and Patricia Delano opens at the Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset, Sunday, March 10, at 5 p.m. Blagdon's acrylics and Delano's watercolors will hang in the invitational gallery from March 4 through March 29.

Both artists have been active in the Center participating in classes, workshops and group exhibits. Delano's still life watercolors lend themselves to "a personal expression of objects" that she selects from her everyday environment which have significance to her. Blagdon's acrylics attempt to combine the real with the abstract and she uses large simple shapes to express spontaneous energy.

Blagdon has been influenced by Milton Avery and Edward Hopper; Delano has been influenced by watercolor artist Sondra Freckelton. Both artists are graduates of the Massachusetts College of Art.

The public is welcome to view this exhibit Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m. and Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. For further information contact the Center, 283-9548.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician
DOCTOR OF CHIROPRACTIC
The first chiropractor to graduate from a chiropractic college did so in 1899. The curriculum at that time could be completed in one year in similar fashion to medical schools. However, just as medical schools have improved over the years, so have colleges of chiropractic. Today's doctors of chiropractic must complete an extremely demanding four-year curriculum. By the time they graduate, they have achieved competence in anatomy, chemistry, bacteriology, toxicology, pathology, physiology, diagnosis and x-ray. In fact, today's doctors of chiropractic have as many hours of government-approved classes in health-related subjects as doctors graduating from medical school. Most importantly to you, your doctor of chiropractic has also spent four full years studying the spine, joint relationships and adjustment procedures.
Today the science of chiropractic is more readily understood and appreciated by all. The benefits of such natural approaches to health goals, the concepts of communication along the spinal column to allow for a natural healing process and other such chiropractic endeavors are readily accepted and effective. For answers to your questions as well as a chiropractic exam for yourself or your entire family, call the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12. Tel. 383-1211, 1214. Wrestling

The wrestling team finished their season last week with the South Sectional Tournament, in which 18 local teams competed. Coach Torin Sweeney was very pleased with his entire team's performance, but he was especially proud of Ricky Roarke who wrestled exceptionally well, surpassing all of his opponents and taking home a first place overall in the tournament. Ricky not only beat four competitors, but he pinned three of them as well. This upcoming Friday and Saturday, Ricky will participate in the state tournament in which Sweeney predicts Ricky will be seeded among the top four in the state. He has an excellent chance of becoming number one in the state.

As for the rest of the team, Sweeney feels that although this was not a winning season, the boys gained a lot of valuable experience which will enable them to come back stronger next year. Sweeney expresses much optimism concerning his team's upcoming years and feels Cohasset will be a dominant force in wrestling.

Leaving the team this year will be Ricky Roarke, James Dillan and Jim Staunton. According to Sweeney, both Dillan and Staunton have been outstanding leaders all season, giving 110 percent at every match.

Next year, Sweeney will be looking to junior Brian Leary, John Froio, John Riley and Bob Corkery for leadership. Sweeney feels that Brian Leary has a good chance of becoming one of the best wrestlers in the area next year.

The rest of the team includes Doug Bennet, Peter Buckley, Jim Donahue, Paul Froio, Glen Froio and Liam Stanford.

Ice Hockey

Wednesday, Cohasset was defeated by one of the strongest teams in the state, Scituate, by a score of 5 - 4. Coach Richard Izzo was very impressed with his team's performance and feels the Skippers played their best game of the year.

Troy Chatterton and Alex Ghetto led Cohasset's offense, scoring two goals apiece. Defensively, Izzo cited Danny Curran as having a strong game as well. In net, Peter Sandbloom held his own for the Skippers and played very well.

The boys concluded their season Saturday, losing to Hull 4 - 2. Izzo is calling this game one of his team's better efforts and feels that tough breaks caused the loss for the Skippers.

Troy Chatterton scored for Cohasset along with Alex Ghetto. Once again goalie Peter Sandbloom had an outstanding game in net.

Overall, Izzo was very proud of his team this season and believes strongly that with a little more experience, Cohasset will come back strong next year.

This year, Izzo congratulated seniors Troy Chatterton, Alex Ghetto and Danny Curran on their fantastic seasons. Troy led the team in scoring, followed closely behind by Alex, while Danny held the defense together on the other end of the ice. According to Izzo, these three led the team both on and off the ice.

Gymnastics

The girls concluded their season on Tuesday, losing to Duxbury 113 to 101.3. Coach Andrea Palardy was pleased with her team's effort and was happy to see Cohasset score over 100 points in their final meet.

Jane deLima stole the show in this meet, coming in second on the beam and first in all other events. Jane scored her highest ever on the vault, Tuesday, with an 8.55. However, in the league meet Thursday, Jane topped this vaulting score and placed second overall in the meet. This qualified Jane into the state tournament Wednesday, in Northboro.

Overall, Palardy was proud of her team's constant improvement all season, and is very optimistic for next season. Cohasset is losing only one senior this year, Julia Sechen, who has been a great leader all season long.

Girls' Basketball

The girls finished their regular season last week placing first in the Small Schools Division, an achievement which Cohasset High School has not seen in over 35 years. The Skippers also set a record for girls' basketball in Cohasset with the most wins ever, 17.

Monday, Cohasset defeated Sandwich 46 to 38. Fallon feels the key to the victory was his team's half-court defense which was sparked by the efforts of Carla Lucas, Anne O'Leary and Vicki Spooner. These three girls held Sandwich's top scorer to only four points after three quarters.

Offensively, Tracy Fitzpatrick led all scorers with 13 points, and also pulled down an incredible 18 rebounds for the Skippers. Sara Seavey followed Tracy with 11 points and then came Janet DiGorolamo with nine.

Wednesday, the Skippers crushed East Bridgewater, 62 - 33. Fallon felt his entire team played exceptionally well on both ends of the court. The Skippers were led by both Tracy Fitzpatrick and Carla Lucas who combined offensively for 28 points.

First Parish

A Peasant of El Salvador has been called by at least one critic the best off-Broadway play this season, and we have an opportunity to see it here on the South Shore for only $3 each. We'll meet at the Parish House Friday, March 1 at 7 p.m. and carpool together to Duxbury High School for this gala event sponsored by our sister Unitarian Universalist First Parish Church in Duxbury. We'll return to Trueblood Hall for conversation and dessert afterward. We regretted missing this two-man drama at General Assembly this summer and are delighted we can see it with local friends now. Call Jack Mulligan (383-9141) or the church office (383-1100) before Sunday, Feb. 24 for reservations.

Potlucks: Our potlucks have begun again, so reserve Wednesday nights from 6:30 to 8 for this informal opportunity to enjoy good friends and good food. No one need call for a reservation, and anything you choose to bring is fine. This is a true potluck, so we may end up with a salad bar or with a dessert, but we usually have a well-balanced delicious meal. Please join us at Trueblood Hall in the Parish House at 6:30 p.m. this coming Wednesday for this family event.

Carriage House Nursery School: Registrations are now available for the '85-'86 school year. Call Sally at 383-9785 if you are interested. Children must be three by Dec. 31, 1985 to enter the two-day class.

Grade 8: The next Human Sexuality class is Sunday, Feb. 24 at 7 p.m.

I'd like to thank the following people who have contributed to the R.E. program this year: Jane Goedecke, Leslie Fallon, Lisa Clinton, Kristin Contis, Liz Williams, Sue Terry, Shelley Weier, Pat Baird, Woody Chittick, Joan deCruz, Joanne Chittick, Mary Lou Studds, and Jill Crafts. You are appreciated!

Special Program: Tuesday, March 19 at 6:30 p.m. at the First Parish in Scituate. The program is called "Volunteers—Working With and Being Effective" and will be presented by Robert Miller, a minister from Plymouth. R.E. committees from Hingham and Norwell have been invited with Scituate and Cohasset. Chowder will be provided. There will be further details in next week's newsletter. Anyone interested should contact Jane McGuinness at 545-6394.

A challenge

Interest in the upcoming April election is minimal. There are few candidates, most are unopposed, and talk about town is that few will join the campaign.

Okay, it's early in the race. It's difficult to drum up enthusiasm for a spring election in the midst of the doldrums of February. But one has to look at it this way. There's only about seven weeks remaining to take out nomination papers, build a team of campaign workers and begin the process of soliciting votes.

One glance at the candidates and the positions open for election this year is revealing indeed. Generally speaking, incumbents are not being challenged this year. Whatever it took to get them elected, has now firmly ensconced them in their committee positions, safe from all challenges.

The question must be asked. Why is there such a lack of interest, a refusal to publically oppose the current political leadership of the town?

Certainly one answer may be that everyone in Cohasset is overwhelmingly impressed with the manner in which the town is managed. Why bother rock the boat when there's smooth sailing? That may be one reason, but a highly unlikely excuse for this year's apathy.

More realistically, we are just that about our politics - apathetic. The status quo may be just okay, but we're not about to alter the course of the town. So why bother? The story goes, however, if we all felt that way and refused to participate, we'd have no one to manage the town, the state or the nation. Obviously the effects of apathy are being felt in our town. But few are so upset, to actually change the situation.

What does it take to run for public office? In addition to a well-proportioned ego, it does take commitment. One must feel some sense of dedication to formulate a valid point of view, publically tackle opponents, and in full view of friends and neighbors, either take comfort in victory or accept defeat. And the knocks just begin with the election. Week after week one must sit upon that committee and make decisions and statements affecting ones neighbors and family. Opinions are not spoken in confidence between two friends now. They are public statements, specifically uttered for all to hear.

Some of us love the attention a public office holder receives. Some of us hate the publicity. But it is more important to rise above those reactions and decide whether we can individually assist our community.

Is there anything we can contribute that no one else has yet to give? Do we possess a certain talent or knowledge that could help the town deal with issues it is currently confronting?

It's perhaps a matter of time, rather than attitude that prevents many of us from running for public office. But just as most of us would rather sit home in front of the tube, it takes a real shove to free us from that temptation. It's a sacrifice for most of us, one that many of us would rather not accept. But what a sense of fulfillment, knowing you gave it a shot, that you made the attempt.

Perhaps you will not change the course of history. Perhaps your candidacy may not succeed. But we can only admire those among us who stood up and accepted the challenge.

NEWS ITEM — Cohasset: Study committee recommends cutting town meeting quorum from 200 to 100. Sessions have been cancelled five times in the last six years for lack of a quorum. Though the move is expected to generate controversy, it would facilitate on-time meeting starts and expedite town business proceedings

"...On the other hand, it's a much more democratic majority if 200 don't show than if 100 don't show up..."

'Is this the party to whom I'm speaking?'

By Claire McDonough

"If there's one thing I can't stand," the Dragon snarled, "it's telephone answering machines. I hate talking to machines. Give me a real, live human being that I can look in the eye when I'm talking to him on the phone. Man to man."

"Good trick," I observed. The kids and I exchanged surreptitious and horrified glances.

"Look," I said, "answering machines aren't all bad. You can have fun leaving weird messages on them.

"For example, at the sound of the tone you can say, 'I called to thank you for the dehydrated walrus.' Then don't leave your name. Just hang up."

Skip smiled. "That's not bad. Or how about, 'The microfilm is in the usual place. Pay as previously directed. The fate of the free world is in your hands.' "

"I like that one," Breida told him, "but you could have even more fun sounding like a hysterical woman saying, 'Jim's on his way over. For heaven's sake, get out. He knows about us and he's vowed to maim you. I've packed my suitcase, and I'll be waiting at the back door. Please come and get me. I'm terrified of what will happen if he comes back and finds me here.' Then hang up."

The Dragon shook his head. "Thanks for trying," he said, "but nothing is going to make me feel good about talking to a benighted machine. And now I realize there are two things I can't stand. The second is people who leave cutesy messages on telephone answering machines."

I sighed. "I guess we've goofed badly this time, but there's no point putting it off any longer. Happy Birthday, Darling."

I placed a festively wrapped package in front of him, and we watched glumly while he unwrapped a telephone answering machine.

We were startled to observe a look of sheer ecstasy spread over his face.

"This is wonderful! Now I can be the one in control. Instead of experiencing the frustration of talking to other people's machines I can make them talk to mine."

"You're really not disappointed?" I asked doubtfully.

"Not at all. Having your own machine is the best revenge." Chortling gleefully he installed the device, and waited for the messages to start arriving.

They did.

The first, in a voice that sounded suspiciously like our daughter Maureen, said, "Hi. I am a bad guy. I mean, I am really bad. Now that I know you are not home I will come to your house and steal all your good things. Remember, I am really bad."

The second sounded like our daughter Eileen and declared, "Hello, Mommy Dearest. I never thought you'd stoop so low as to have one of these machines. You have just blown the opportunity to talk to your grandson. Goodbye."

The third message was from a vanpooler who had definite words to describe people with answering machines. Regrettably, none of these words can be reproduced in a family newspaper.

I went to bed.

After work the following day I asked the Dragon if he had received any messages.

"Well," he replied, "some people did the same thing I used to do when I got a machine. They hung up.

"Four messages said they were from people who were too busy to make calls, but had instructed their machines to call and talk to my machine.

"Six were from Vera Maginnis. I called her back and we had a nice chat.

"I was glad I had the machine for the two phone calls from people selling encyclopedias, the one from a time-sharing vacation club, and the political poll.

"But I was a little nervous about one. It was either a joke or a wrong number. I hope."

He replayed the tape, and we both listened to a male voice say, "You have until 7:30 p.m. to call the Internal Revenue Service."

I shuddered. "Offer him the microfilm" I suggested. "Or maybe you can get him to run away with Jim's wife."

LWV candidates guide

The League of Women Voters of Massachusetts has moved to fill a crucial information gap in publishing its newly updated candidate's guide to running for office, Ready, Get Set, Go: A Candidate's Guide.

It is available from the League office (357-8380) for $5.50 including postage and handling.

The guide explains every step of a campaign: How to make a critical assessment of the candidate's situation, organize a campaign committee, a strategy, a budget, and a finance drive.

Either a veteran or a potential candidate will find guidance on recruiting and managing volunteers, designing, financing and using campaign materials, and choosing suitable campaign techniques from the variety available. In addition, A Candidate's Guide provides information on state laws, planning public relations for maximum effectiveness, the basic election day needs, and the necessary close-out activities after the election.

Organization and planning are essential to a successful campaign. The steps to this goal are clearly described in Ready, Get Set, Go: A Candidate's Guide, published by the League of Women Voters of Massachusetts.

For further information, call 357-8380.

Student essay award announcement

In luncheon ceremonies held last week, members of the Old Goats announced plans to begin an annual scholarship award to Cohasset High School.

The Gilbert Tower Memorial Award will be presented annually to the Cohasset High School student who composes the best essay on town planning. The award contest will begin next fall, in memory of Gilbert Tower, a former Planning Board chairman and Honorary Town Engineer.

One of the earliest records of 'motoring' in Cohasset. Gilbert Tower is seated at the steering lever of his father's automobile. The photograph, taken about 1900, also includes Everett Gammons to the left of Gilbert, and Josiah Wheelwright in front. At Gilbert's left is Theodore Behre.

The essay contest will be judged by several school and community leaders, including Bill Kite, head of the school's English department, Ed Sheehan, Social Studies Department chairman, David Cutler, publisher of the Mariner, chairmen of the Planning Board and Board of Selectmen, and Deborah Cook, President of the Cohasset League of Women Voters.

At the luncheon held last week to formally announce the contest, Gilbert's daughter, Frances Malami, spoke to the club members. Noting that her father, an enthusiastic chronicler of town planning issues, was often distressed by the lack of community response to his frequently-published letters. "This (the contest), he would have felt, would be the best response of all," she said.

It was her father's primary interest in history that spawned his enthusiasm for planning and zoning issues. Even while raising his family, Mrs. Malami stated, he would chart his children's growth according to the most important event which occurred that year.

High school instructors Sheehan and Kite thanked the club for "caring about public education." It is events such as the essay contest which convince teachers "in the trenches" that "this community deeply cares about education."

Publisher Cutler thanked the club for inviting his participation in the contest, and noted the award "is a reflection of how deeply the people of this community care about their town."

LWV President Cook noted that the contest coincided with her organization's efforts to study the future growth of the town.

Supt. Eugene Crowell, accepting the award which will remain in the school with the award winner's name inscribed each year, called the contest "a living memorial" to Tower. He pledged the school's continual support for the contest "for many years to come."

A separate award, inscribed with some original writing by Gilbert composed in 1898, was given to Constance Parker in behalf of the Cohasset Historical Society.

Louis Walinsky presents the Gilbert Tower Memorial Award plaque to School Supt. Eugene Crowell. The placque will hold the names of future winners of the annual essay contest. (Bill Quigley)

Get help - don't attempt ice rescue yourself

What should I do if I see a dog in distress on the ice?

Three simple steps—nothing else!

1. Keep off the ice.
2. Observe where you are.
3. Find a phone—call the police—give an accurate location of the dog.

Once you have done this, get back to the scene as quickly as possible, so you can direct rescue vehicles to the dog.

If the dog is close to shore, talk to it! Give it as much encouragement to hang in there as you possibly can.

But don't—I repeat, don't—go out on the ice after it. Resist that urge we all have to help that poor animal. Stay on shore and wait for the rescue vehicles to arrive. It's going to be difficult enough to rescue the dog—don't add to the problem by going through the ice yourself. If that happens, we'll have to forget about the dog and concentrate on fishing you out.

Every year across the country several people needlessly lose their lives trying to rescue animals off the ice. There is, in my opinion, no animal worth rescuing if it's going to cost the life of a human being.

The towns we live in are blessed with an abundance of beautiful ponds, streams, and miles of seashore.

Winter weather turns these bodies of water into potential death traps for unsuspecting dogs who venture out onto the ice.

Year after year, police, firemen and animal control officers are dispatched on calls to rescue a dog that has gone through the ice. More than once, by the time we arrive, all that can be found is footprints to the edge—and no dog!

Dog owners living near bodies of water should take extra steps to keep their dogs restrained during this time of year. No matter how much we emphasize leash laws or animal control, it fails to sink in to some pet owners that dogs and ice don't mix.

The photos in the article show the Hull animal control officer, Ken Conway, and the Hull Fire Department rescuing a dog from the ocean last week. The estimated cost to rescue the dog was approximately $500. The dog had no collar, was unlicensed and impossible to identify. He was taken to the Hingham Animal Clinic and treated for exposure. It was two days before we received a call from the owner looking for her dog.

I feel very strongly that the dog owner should be billed by the town for the $500 rescue costs. I would also issue a leash citation! Hey—the dog was loose, was not licensed, had no collar or identification tags, and it was two days before the owner came looking for the dog—a really responsible pet owner!

Please, folks—if you see a dog in distress on the ice, don't try to be a hero—call for help and stand by.

Just a brief comment—The Mariner has informed me that my column is going to be printed in other Mariners. I'm flattered that the editor thinks enough of the column to give it such exposure. I hope the reader response is as favorable in the other towns as it has been in Hingham.

One thing I want to emphasize is that leash laws, or control laws, vary from town to town: I will answer specific questions with specific answers but will try to present an overall view of similar problems we encounter as animal control officers on a daily basis.

I will try to be as informative as possible, not too technical and with as much humor as I can get away with. After all—without some humor none of us would be able to continue in this profession for any length of time. Thanks for your support!

'The hills are alive' with the 'Sound of Music'

By Corinne A. Kutish

Music review

With a cast of extremely talented children, Hingham Civic Music Theatre presented an enjoyable evening of "The Sound of Music" last weekend at the Hingham High School auditorium.

This beloved musical, written by Rodgers and Hammerstein, continues this Friday and Saturday night, Feb. 22 and 23, at 8 p.m.

The leads are played capably by Donna Milani Luther (Maria) and Donald S. Capen (Captain Von Trapp), but it's the children that steal the show.

The eldest, Liesl, is played by the endearing Becky Herzberg, who executed a charming rendition of "Sixteen Going on Seventeen" with her young love, Rolf, played by William White.

Counting down in size from there is Collamore Crocker as the eldest son, Friedrich; Cara Harries as Louisa; Adam Turner as Kurt; Kate di Lima as the outspoken Brigitta; Emily Bartholomew as Marta; and diminutive Claire Whittner as the baby, Gretl.

These kids gave a heck of a performance, including a performance of "So Long, Farewell" that rivaled the movie version of this hit broadway show. In this number, the children are saying good night to guests at a lavish party given by their father. Each child has his or her own solo typifying the individual personality.

The story of "The Sound of Music" is probably known by all. It concerns a young Austrian girl, Maria, who is a nun-in-training in the days before World War II. Her only problem is her exuberance, which gets her in continual trouble at the abbey.

She is sent to be the governess at the home of a strict sea captain, Von Trapp, where she brings love and music to his large family of children. In the process, Von Trapp and Maria also fall in love. In the final scene, the entire family ingeniously escapes from the advancing German army.

Director James "Bud" Berlenbach has taken a large cast and molded them into a finely-tuned unit. Scene changes are swift and worked into the plot.

The real beauty of the show, of course, is its music. A full 21 numbers are sung during the course of the nearly three-hour show.

The only criticism is that the acting in between the numbers seemed to be rushed at time. I would have enjoyed a change to savor some of the interaction between cast members before plunging forward to the next song.

Special mention should be made of Jeannie Scammell and Norman Shaw, who played Elsa Schraeder and Max Detweiler. As Elsa, the wealthy socialite with her cap set on Von Trapp, Jeannie Scammell is sophisticated and shrewd.

As Max, a lovable but conniving friend of the Von Trapp family, Norman Shaw plays a perfect counterpart to Scammell. The two share a pair of comic duets, coming across lively and professional.

The Mother Abbess and comic Sisters Berthe, Sophia and Margaretta also gave strong performances. They were played by Violet Villani (Mother Abbess), and Joyce McDonough, Martha Gaffey and Kathy Kemen. The four sang an amusing rendition of "Maria", in which they lament the shortcomings of their youthful postulant.

The sets, cleverly designed by Andrew Callahan, worked well during the frequent scene changes.

The costumes were many and all beautifully executed by a crew consisting of Gay De Maggio, Marie Terman, Denise Wallace, Marty Roscoe, Edie Earle, and Marion Hawkins. The children alone had six costume changes. Marion Hawkins had 13 nuns to robe. A mammoth task well-done.

The 11-piece orchestra was ably directed by Salvatore V. Bartolotti through the show's large group of numbers.

"The Sound of Music" continues this weekend at the Hingham High School auditorium. Tickets are available at the Hingham Public Library, Hingham Square Book Store, or at the door.

Bring the family, too. It may keep the kids up a little later than normal, but they're sure to enjoy the songs and entertainment.

Three performance dates

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will present three performances of Paul Osborn's American play "Morning's At Seven" at the Cohasset Town Hall with play dates of Friday, March 1, Saturday, March 2 and Sunday, March 3. The Friday and Saturday performances are at 8 p.m., the Sunday performance is a matinee at 2 p.m.

Additionally, senior citizens are invited to attend at no charge the final dress rehearsal on Thursday, Feb. 28 and/or the Sunday matinee March 3.

For those needing tickets for "Morning's At Seven," they will be $4, available at the door at times of performance or in advance at Fleming's, Cohasset Center.

Five works of art must be submitted by those working in painting, drawing or pastel and 10 pieces in photography, sculpture and crafts. Slides are not acceptable for gallery selection.

Staci Ann Stobart, a senior at Cohasset High School, has been selected as a candidate for the Presidential Scholars Program. This program is designed to recognize the most outstanding senior students in the country.

Staci is one of fifteen hundred (1500) students nationally who have been initially selected from more than three million graduating high school seniors. By May 1, one hundred and forty-one finalists will be selected. These finalists will be invited to Washington where their scholastic achievement will be recognized, and they will meet with the President and members of Congress.

Staci is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Stobart.

Elizabeth Riley and Staci Stobart, seniors at Cohasset High School, have been named Finalists in the National Merit Scholarship Program. Fewer than one-half of one percent of American high school seniors are selected as Finalists in the National Merit scholarship competition. These finalists will now be considered for scholarships offered through college and corporate institutions.

Elizabeth is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Riley.

Selectmen seek bylaw change

Based on a letter from John Hubbard, Cohasset's representative to the GSA regarding the Army Reserve land, selectmen are contemplating a proposed planning change.

Hubbard explained that Hingham has zoned land contained within the former Army land, and all of Wompatuck State Park, as Official and Open Space, thereby preventing any residential development. In light of a possibility of future residential construction on 135 acres of that land, Hubbard suggested Cohasset consider a similar move.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said Tuesday night such a zoning change might be in order. She suggested that the Planning Board consider formulating such a proposal for their March 6 public hearing on zoning bylaw changes. The Cohasset land in question should be rezoned to open space, selectmen said, although that land is also contained within the watershed protection district.

It may be too late to submit such a proposal into the advertisement for the March public hearing, they determined. If it is too late, an article proposing the zoning change could be submitted into a warrant for a future special Town Meeting. Although no such meeting has been scheduled, selectmen said it was likely that a special will be held sometime this year.

According to Hubbard's letter, the GSA has decided that 135 acres of the 767 acres in the Army Reserve land is suitable for development. Although the Federal National Park Service and every state and local official have opposed any development, GSA has submitted plans to sell the land to private developers. The Department of Environmental Management has alternate plans to give the entire acreage to the state to become part of Wompatuck State Park.

According to Hubbard, "there has been no significant activity with GSA on the matter since Mr. Guttensohn's (DEM commissioner) letter in August. Development of the size proposed by GSA would have a serious impact on the town for many reasons."

Selectmen were to notify the Planning Board about the suggestion, in hope of including another article into their proposed zoning changes.

Vo-Tech budget explained

Cohasset's representative to the South Shore Vocational High School explained this week why the proposed annual budget has been vastly increased.

Although Cohasset's assessment to the school is down by more than 12 percent to $18,578, Selectman Frank England wanted an explanation for the overall budget increase of about 39 percent over this year.

School representative David Chittim explained the reasons for the increases, adding that he supported the appropriations based on need. Maintenance of school roofs can not be put off another year, he said, 30 year-old texts must be replaced, new equipment is needed and will be leased next year.

Chittim said he is very enthusiastic about the school, its faculty and programs. He noted that more Cohasset students should be encouraged to attend the school. Placements after graduation from South Shore Vocational High School average 100 percent. This year, Cohasset is sending only six students to the school.

Cohasset Worship . . .

The Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints

Cheryl Turner, 17, of Cohasset and Karen Twomey, 17, of Hanson, both members of the Young Women's Organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Hingham, received a gold medallion necklace in recognition of their outstanding performance of goal-setting over a six-year period.

The awards were made at a dinner party held at the home of Mrs. Harold Burnham in Duxbury. Burnham is president of the young women's group. The 17 girls of the class, accompanied by parents, met to celebrate a new year of goai-setting and personal progress.

"The Personal Progess program of the church has really helped local girls to improve their lives. Many of them now have a closer relationship with the Lord and a better sense of where they're going in life," said Burnham. "I am really proud of these girls," she added. In addition, they are learning new skills and applying them, like the older girls who planned and prepared for this dinner party; while the younger girls prepared their rendition of a poem 'Pretty as a Picture' set to music," Burnham said.

The program offers wide opportunities for the girls who range in age from 12 to 17. A "Service and Compassion" goal could involve a daily good deed for family members or friends, or even a community clean-up project. A "Spiritual Awareness" goal might include a daily effort to study scriptures and pray. The girls attend 'Seminary' class held each school day at 6 to 7 a.m. throughout the school year for the four high school years. This represents great effort and discipline on their part.

"Cultural Arts and Education" is another area of concentration. In that area, girls may set goals to develop musical interests, begin a reading program or write regularly in a journal.

Caring for children, proper eating habits, and camping and survival skills come under "Homemaking and Recreational Skills" and are encouraged.

The last area of goals is "Personal and Social Refinement," where goals can be set for overcoming bad habits and improving personal grooming, among other things.

"The girls set their own goals," said Burnham. "We are here to encourage them and guide them. It's exciting for us as leaders and for the girls too when goals are achieved. Cheryl and Karen will no doubt treasure their awards and medallions all of their lives, for they represent a very deep and meaningful period in their lives."

The goal-setting plan can work for young women of any denomination. If you are interested in learning more about the program, please call Polly Doggett at 383-1847.

More budgets . . .

to not consider this additional item because "it is not in the budget and the budget is closed," Burke said.

The Advisory Committee approved $3,082 for landfill recycling expenses. The recommendation was made to vote for $1,800 to ship glass to recycling plants instead of burying the glass at the dump. Members reasoned that shipment of the glass elsewhere would eventually save the town money in tires for equipment, which must often be replaced after covering glass.

In other business, the Advisory Committee recommended:

- $15,955 for general expenses in the Assessors office.
- $11,971 for the Town Accountant's central computer.
- $131,381 for insurance general expenses and $286,836 for group insurance.
- $13,835 for the Planning Board general expenses.
- $110,000 for the Town Reserve Fund.
- $48,385 for Sewer Department general expenses.
- $61,766 for the Sewer Department personal services.
- $4,624 for Town Meeting and Elections general expenses.
- $560 for Advisory Committee general expenses.
- $3,547 for Capital Outlay (Board of Selectmen) for a new computer.

Computers . . .

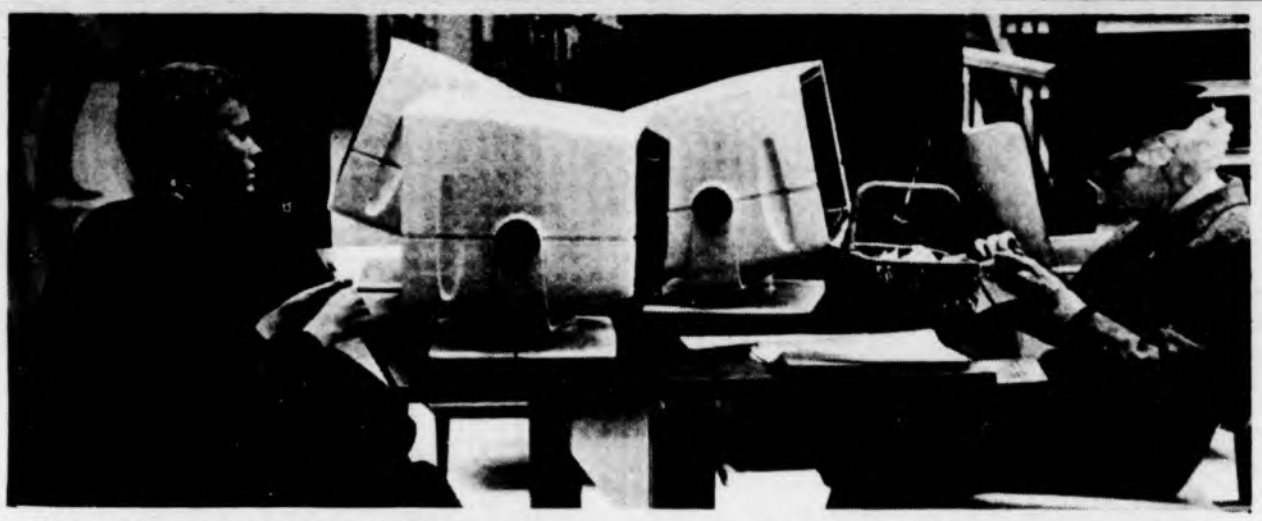
What the $50,000 will give Cohasset is six computer terminals, purchased over a three-year period. Those terminals and the software programs will cost about $30,000. Labor costs to convert the card catalogue system to the computers, will cost about $11,000 over a two-year phasing-in period. A one-time cost for materials to convert the system into computers will be about $9000, according to Hayes.



"I feel good about this program, and about asking the town to support it," the director said this week. "It's one of the few things the town has been asked to do to actually improve the quality of their library. For the past four years, we have been simply trying to maintain the level of services."

Through this network, card catalogues will be virtually eliminated in a few years. Users will have access to the computer terminals to locate titles and subject matters. And rather than having the volumes limited to Cohasset, a library card holder in Cohasset will have access to all volumes within that 15-town region.

Towns which are proposing to enter into the Old Colony Network include Quincy, Braintree, Scituate, Norwell, Hanover, Marshfield, Duxbury; as far south as Bridgewater, and west to Walpole. There is also a list of towns which anticipate joining the cooperative the following year.

Currently, there are 60 libraries across the state participating in user networks such as the Old Colony. Proposals to join the networks are being reviewed in hundreds more towns throughout Massachusetts. According to Hayes, who has kept a close watch on the progress of library networks, townspeople from only one town have thus far rejected a proposal to participate.

The reason Hayes is so anxious to join this year, is the availability of federal funds. A special grant program will enable the Old Colony Network, for instance, to purchase enough computers and software to service the entire region. After the completion of this fiscal year, funding for libraries seems destined for drastic reduction, Hayes admitted. And without federal financial assistance, communities will be unable to cover the costs of starting up such a sophisticated system.

This is how the Paul Pratt Library will look when computer terminals provide immediate access to books throughout a 15-town network.

"We can no longer think about individual libraries owning all the titles it wants," Hayes explained. "There is a need for towns to share their resources. This program represents a vast improvement in the use of public libraries without added annual costs. With this system, we can improve the services of the Pratt Library without adding to our staff."

Through the computerized system, a cap will be placed on labor, since there will no longer be a need for filing and checking books. Paper costs to complete these transactions will be eliminated each year. As Hayes noted, 700 items are processed daily at the Cohasset library. Those items must be filed and unfiled, taking time away from other staff services, and additional costs for paperwork.

One thing the network will not accomplish, is to automate the personal service the library currently maintains with its users. Hayes is confident that personalized service will be more available to the several hundred card holders in this town. And the library will still depend on the 48 volunteers who faithfully donate an average of 55 hours per week.

"This is a smart management move. A centralized computer will keep all our transactions in order, update our records and keep control over the outstanding materials and collection system. It's better management all around," Hayes added.

Because of the inability of smaller libraries, such as Cohasset's, to grow according to increased use, regional networks are the trend throughout the country, Hayes said. "People in this society are well-educated and more affluent than ever before. They know what they want, and they insist on instant gratification. They will not support a weak library, and that is a point well understood," according to the director.

This "matter of survival" has received the unanimous support of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library trustees. Scituate's town administration has issued its support of the plan, in addition to several area towns, including Norwell and Duxbury.

As the director noted, "it would be a shame not to join and lose this opportunity to participate with all our neighbors. It's clearly a matter of survival for this library."

Incumbents look safe for upcoming elections

By Wednesday, the list of potential election candidates was just about complete. There are few contested offices, and it looks as if incumbents have clear sailing from here.

The fifty signatures needed to secure nomination for an elected office must be filed by Friday. Elections are scheduled for April 13.

John DeBassio's resignation as selectman created a two-year unexpired term. That has stirred the most interest, with two residents filing intentions to run. James Gallagher, a Recreation Commissioner, has submitted the necessary signatures for nomination to that seat. Diane Sullivan of Jerusalem Road, a Drainage Advisory Committee member, filed her intent to run for that office on Monday.

All other offices, with the possible exception of a one-year term on the Paul Pratt Library Board of Trustees, and a five-year seat on the Recreation Commission, are uncontested.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle has filed intentions to run for re-election. He has yet to submit nomination signatures, but he is assured of no opposition in his bid to keep a three-year seat on the board.

Elizabeth Eaton has filed her nomination signatures for a three-year seat on the Board of Trustees of the library. David Wadsworth has also submitted the required nomination signatures for a three-year position. Agnes McCann has filed an intent to run for a three-year seat on the Board of Trustees.

Accountant retires from post

It was with deep regret that selectmen accepted this week the resignation of Town Accountant William Signorelli.

A veteran within his post at Town Hall, Signorelli for 27 years observed the people and policies of Cohasset politics. Although he's been a mainstay for all at Town Hall, Signorelli terminated his position for health reasons.

Diagnosed as hypertensive, Signorelli has been felled by several illnesses the past two years. He just returned this week after a bout of pneumonia.

Appearing before selectmen Monday night, Signorelli appeared healthy and robust. A reserved man who has traditionally shied away from publicity and political posturing, he offered his resignation in a brief letter to selectmen. Stating simply that because of persistent health problems since 1983, he would be retiring from his employment.

Signorelli, a longtime Cohasset resident, will receive standard pension benefits as a result of his retirement at the age of 55.

His last day of work at Town Hall will be April 22, allowing for compensatory vacation days. His official date of retirement is May 31. Although he has 90 additional sick days allotted to him, Signorelli said he will take no additional time.

Looking back on his many years of public employment, Signorelli said this week, "I have enjoyed this job since its inception, I have been very excited about this job. I was fortunate to have the complete cooperation of all town employees and departments.

"I'm sure I'll miss all of this," he said, glancing around his office, "but the time came to make a decision. I explored all remedies available, and my only choice was to improve my health."

Acknowledging that a less compulsive perfectionist may never have developed his health problems, Signorelli admitted "a lot of my problems are because of my own make-up. I take my job and its duties and responsibilities very seriously."

To a successor in his position, Signorelli would note, "this job requires a lot of time and effort. You deal with a lot of departments, boards and committees. There is a constant demand for information. Information is always needed."

For the current Town Accountant, it has always been more than a 40-hour job. To whomever his replacement may be, he states, "It has to be someone really interested in accounting. The Cohasset Town Accountant has to be concerned about maintaining and controlling costs. The accountant has that responsibility. We have to live within Proposition 2 1/2. We have to make every effort and still operate efficiently."

One of the tasks in which Signorelli participated was the implementation of the municipal computer system. Although Town Hall employees this year complained about the delays experienced in processing materials into the main computer, Signorelli feels that problem is resolved. Additional equipment, which was utilized on an interim basis, has solved the delays, he noted. Town Meeting will be asked in April to appropriate $40,000 to purchase the additional equipment.

Now that the resignation is behind him, Signorelli will await a more restful and relaxing future. He plans to remain in Cohasset and do some private accounting work.

Unlimited future for Channel 3

By Jane Lane

In Hull, viewers faithfully turn each week to see their selectmen literally slug it out on live TV. In Scituate, residents relax and watch recorded versions of the latest school committee controversy.

This should be, and could be the same in Cohasset. The thousands of Cohasset cable television subscribers should be able to turn on the set, and watch an array of local-produced events, meetings and programs. Use of community television is limitless, according to Cohasset Cablesystems General Manager John Ronan.

While the equipment and studio await production use, there are hundreds of events left untelevised. Selectmen's meetings, once a weekly event on Channel 3, have disappeared from view because of a limited supply of cameramen. Art shows, organizational meetings, and specialized classes, are samples of some events which would make great community television, according to Ronan. But there has to be someone to create the idea for a new show, and a person willing to produce it. Usually, that person is one and the same.

As Cable Advisory Committee Chairman David Chittim says, "Cohasset is a small, but very sophisticated town. We have all sorts of community programs going on. We now have every opportunity to produce those events on Channel 3, for everyone to share. We should take adavantage of this opportunity."

Ronan explains that unlike large-market commercial television stations, community television can offer its viewers a much broader variety of programming. "Anything that isn't libelous, scandalous, or obscene is allowed on community television," he adds.

Anyone interested in teaching classes in such subjects as exercise, dance, sewing, cooking, stenciling, or woodworking, would have an audience of some magnitude, he assures. In other towns services by American Cablesystems, there are comedy nights, where local comedians take turns doing routines. There are phone-in talk shows, ala Phil Donahue, without an audience. But even something of that nature is not an impossibility, according to Ronan. "You come up with the idea, we'll talk it

Cohasset's week . . .

Bridge construction plans

Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield is in the process of submitting plans to rehabilitate the Border Street and Cunningham bridges. Litchfield is applying for state funds totaling $90,000 for the construction work.

Included in the proposal are plans to remove deteriorated concrete railings and coping walls, and installing "standard aluminum bridge railing" on the Border Street bridge. According to Litchfield's correspondence with the state Highway Department, "an existing wooden rail will be replaced with a guardrail along the top of stone retaining walls on the bridge approaches."

Rehabilitation of the Cunningham Bridge will consist of replacing the existing guardrail, resurfacing, and replacing the existing concrete and bituminous concrete sidewalk.

According to Litchfield who requested the wage rates from the state department, "It is the town's intention to include these rates in the contract for the proposed work. It is anticipated that the project will be advertised in April of 1985."

When selectmen first discussed the possibility of state funds for renovation to the Border Street bridge last spring, many residents vigorously opposed any plans that would include the installation of the aluminum guardrails, often seen on expressway overpasses.

Saying the rails would detract from the picturesque nature of the bridge, several people, including Historical Society members, voiced their strong objections. Plans for the rehabilitation work were put on hold until these plans were devised.

Building permit fees settled

Because Building Inspector Edward Poskus did not receive a check for a building permit fee from one of the school roofing contractors, that fee was doubled.

Per order of the Building Inspector, the fee to be paid by Titan Roofing of Chickopee was doubled to a total of $1,935. The second firm, which completed repairs to the Deer Hill School, submitted a fee check to the inspector's office by the deadline of February 15, That fee was, therefore, not doubled.

Census forms returned

Town Clerk Frances Marks has advised all residents to return their state census forms to her Town Hall office.

Although the forms were due last week, Marks said she has not received them all. It is important for town and state purposes, that the forms be returned immediately.

Fire Captain appointment

Selectmen delayed appointing Firefighter Richard Silvia as Acting Fire Captain until they determine whether there is enough money in the department's salary account to pay for the promotion.

Silvia acheived the highest score on the most recent Civil Service Fire Captain's examination, passing the test with a mark of more than 90. Chief Martin Dooley recommended the appointment to selectmen, saying that Silvia "has no blemishes on his record, and is a willing and dedicated employee."

Although selectmen agreed with the selection of Silvia as Acting Captain, they said they could not make any appointment until they know how they are going to compensate him. The difference in the salaries will be about $2000, according to the Chief. Selectmen said they will check with the Town Accountant to see how much money is left in the salary budget.

Silvia would be appointed Acting Captain, replacing current Acting Captain Richard Conley, who was recently injured on the job. His physicians, Chief Dooley remarked, have said Conley will be out on sick leave for five to six months. "We need that position filled immediately," he told selectmen.

Although selectmen agreed with the immediacy of the situation, they will not make an appointment until they know they can provide compensation. They are expected to fill the vacancy at next Monday's meeting.

Executive secretary search

Selectmen have received a total of 19 resumes in response to their advertisement for an executive secretary. This week they will individually review the resumes and submit lists of candidates to be interviewed.

All except two of the perspective candidates are from out-of-state, some from mid-western states. The advertisement was published in the Boston Globe, in addition to a national municipal newsletter.

It has been six months since the town has had an executive secretary. Janet Chalke has been serving in a temporary, acting capacity since that time. Although one candidate was selected for the position in November, he declined selectmen's offer. After that, selectmen decided to start again and proceeded with another round of advertisements.

Recycling continues

Glass will continue to be recycled and transported to the Dayville, CT recycling plant, according to the Board of Health.

The Advisory Board reinstated the cost of transporting glass into the FY 1986 budget.

Upon learning of the Advisory Board's first decision not to fund the transportation costs next year, the Board of Health presented additional supportive documentation which proves that recycling is not only cost effective from a total cost standpoint, but also a successful program which lengthens the lifespan of the landfill.

The Board of Health encourages all of the townspeople to participate in the Recycling Program. Last year over 50 tons of glass, 50 tons of metal and less than one ton of aluminum were recycled. Not only did this save the taxpayers $1,153,00 in landfill cover material costs, but also generated an income of $2,277.

A special thank you is extended to all of you recyclers who have made this a successful, effective operation. Keep up the good work and pass this information along to a Cohasset neighbor or friend who is not recycling so that we can again double our tonnage of recyclables as we did from 1983 to 1984.

Housing grants 'vicious circle'

Once again, last week Cohasset was denied state and federal funds to rehabilitate or construct moderate and low income dwellings.

In this last round of grants awarded by the Executive Office of Communities and Development, Cohasset was low man once again. Not since they were awarded funds ten years ago to build 64-units for the elderly on Elm Street, has the Housing Authority received any government housing assistance. As authority member John Muncey says, "It's a vicious circle."

Each opportunity, usually twice a year, the Housing Authority has applied for assistance to build six units of moderate and low income housing. Last year, the state threatened to withhold funds for water and sewer project funds if the town did not provide some type of public housing for low income residents. Although the state has twice denied that funding for six apartment units in town, Muncey said that at the very least, there are no pending water and sewer grant proposals that can be terminated by the state.

Muncey explained that the amount of money needed to purchase property or existing dwellings in Cohasset far exceeds the funding limits set by the state. The most the state will allow for the purchase of a single-family home is $125,000. That, according to the authority member, is far below the average price found in Cohasset. The state will subsidize apartment units up to $550 per month, but rents in this town are much greater than that, he noted. Therefore, anything the town proposes to the state is rejected because of lack of available money.

"The chairman of the housing authority, the director and I went into EOCD this past spring. We went to the different departments where grants are reviewed and approved. One department would subsidize apartments at a $550 monthly allowance. At that time, you couldn't rent in Cohasset for that price. We struck out before we made a move," Muncey said. According to the authority member, "their scale does not meet ours. We come in and apply for the money, but we never get it."

One factor in the state's rejection of Cohasset's latest housing proposal was lack of a specific site for the six housing units. Muncey said they could not specify the location, because they are unsure what land or housing is available in town. Although they requested a list of available town-owned property from selectmen, the authority members never received a list.

What a proposal should contain, he added, is the location and purchase price of land, site development costs, architectural fees, and contracting information. Because no specific site was chosen in Cohasset, that information could not be completed. Muncey explained that the grant funding process simply involves a form-type application. There is no grant proposal writing involved.

At the authority's meeting last week, members requested that Director Barbara Clain complete an application for Section Eight funds. This state grant program would be used to either purchase or rehabilitate an existing structure into six low and moderate income housing units.

"But the problem with the inconsistency between state funds and Cohasset costs will always exist," Muncey said. "The state allows X amount of dollars, and you can't buy in Cohasset for that. If it costs $2 a square foot to construct in Cohasset, the state can do it for 50 cents a square foot in Weymouth. So who's going to get the dollars?"

Area donations

The Harold Brooks Foundation, a charitable trust established in May 1984, awarded $120,000 to area organizations during its first seven months of operation.

Grants were made to South Shore Hospital, First Congregational Church of Braintree, Mass. Cerebral Palsy Association of the South Shore, Quincy Crisis Center, South Shore Conservatory of Music, South Shore Art Center of Cohasset.

The Law and You

by Richard Price, Attorney-at-Law

WITNESSING A WILL

The execution of a will generally involves signing it in the presence of witnesses. You will announce that the document is your will. When leaving the property to someone other than a relative, do not allow the beneficiary's to be present when the will is executed. The beneficiary's absence helps negate any inference that he or she exercised any "undue influence" over you. Similarly, witnesses must not be heirs who would receive the property under laws of intestacy if the will is later declared invalid. Ideally, in fact, no one mentioned in the will, other than an executor or trustee, should be present. Witnesses should be individuals who are not related to you.

No matter what your legal problem may be, the LAW OFFICES OF RICHARD PRICE is here to help. I will take the time to thoroughly listen to each clients problems before trying to solve them. Remember, your rights are one of your most important possessions. My office is located at 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Rt. 3A, Cohasset, 383-9882. I will be happy to answer your questions and to take whatever legal action is in your best interests. Call for an appt.

HINT
The witnesses to the signing of a will should be tracable if they moved away.

Races shape up for April elections

Michele Buckley has filed her intentions to campaign for the one-year term, along with Mary Devaney of Summer Street. As of Wednesday, neither had submitted the 50 signatures necessary for nomination. There are three positions for three years available on library Board of Trustees, and one position to fill an unexpired one year-term.

Joseph Nedrow, current Chairman of the School Committee, has filed the required number of signatures for re-election. He will have no opponents in his bid for a second three-year term.

Barbara Bliss has filed intentions to run for a three-year term on the school board. Since there is no opposition to Nedrow's candidacy, Bliss will be running for the seat which will be vacated by incumbent Martha Gjesteby.

Lot Bates has filed the necessary signatures for nomination to a three-year seat on the Water Commission. A longtime member of the commission and a former chairman, Bates will have no opposition in this election.

Michael Patrolia will be seeking re-election to a three-year term on the Board of Assessors. He has submitted the required signatures for nomination to that office.

John O'Toole, a current member of the Planning Board, has filed signatures for re-election. He will be unopposed for a five-year term.

Among the other candidates who have declared their intentions to run for office are: Raimond Vanderweil for a three-year term on the Sewer Commission. Vanderweil, who was appointed last spring to fill a vacancy on the commission when Joseph Gwinn resigned, has yet to submit the necessary signatures.

Kathleen Conte has filed intentions with the Town Clerk's office to run for an unexpired four-year term on the Cohasset Housing Authority.

Marguerite Libby intends to run for a five-year term she currently holds on the housing authority.

Robert Beggan intends to run for a five-year term on the Cohasset Recreation Commission. He had not submitted the 50 signatures to the Town Clerk's office by Wednesday afternoon. A probable opponent to his candidacy will be Deborah Eaton, who also filed a notice of intent. As of Wednesday, Eaton had not yet submitted the required signatures.

John Burns intends to run for a three-year term on the Cohasset Board of Health. He had not filed the required nomination signatures as of Wednesday. If Burns' candidacy is validated, he will replace the seat currently held by Marilyn Sweeney. She did not file for re-election to that board.

Nomination papers for the April 13 town election have been available at the Town Clerk's office since January. Wednesday was the last day to take out nomination papers. All perspective candidates have until Friday at 5 p.m. to submit the 50 signatures necessary for nomination.

Sen. Bill Golden reports

State Sen. William Golden is seeking volunteer attorneys to aid South Shore public and private non-profit organizations.

As part of this effort, Golden has advertised in a local professional newspaper for public interest lawyers to volunteer their services on housing, transportation, environmental and education projects involving South Shore non-profit organizations.

"Local non-profit organizations have always been a valued asset to the community. However, projected federal budget cuts and increased competition for funding of state programs will increase demands placed on non-profits. A growing number of services which have traditionally been provided by public and governmental agencies may now become the responsibility of non-profit organizations.

Sen. Golden will hold office hours in all seven towns in the Norfolk-Plymouth District beginning March 11.

The hours will be as follows:

Marshfield Town Hall, Monday March 11 at 7:30 p.m.; Hingham Town Hall, Tuesday March 19 at 7:30 p.m.; Cohasset Town Hall, Monday March 25 at 7:00 p.m.; and Scituate Town Hall, Tuesday March 26 at 7:30 p.m.

Senator Golden will meet with constituents and Town officials during these hours. If you have any questions or these hours are not convenient for you, please call the State House office at 722-1646.

Need for community input

over, and see what we can produce. I'm sure that just about any idea people can think of, will be possible for us to do," he says.

Almost 200 Cohasset residents have been trained in video production at the Stagecoach Way studio. Chittim was one the the first, and says although he was apprehensive at first, it was a successful venture.

"I am not a technical person at all so I was pretty nervous about how involved the training would be," he recalls. "But it was a small class, and everything was explained simply. We had a good time and we all learned a lot."

Ronan says the free training classes feature hands-on training with $65,000 worth of studio equipment. Students attend four workshop sessions at the studio, he says, and by the conclusion, they are ready to produce, film and edit their own program. "That may sound scary, but it's absolutely true. People who are frightened of computers and all types of technical equipment, are capable of mastering the cameras and sound equipment we have here," he adds.

"It's so important that community television is utilized. That's why we're here. There are so many creative possibilities for creative people. In these training sessions, we teach people how to write and speak in a video tape production. We want to see people in Cohasset use community television as another means of expression," Ronan says.

There are several shows currently produced at the Cohasset Village location which have succeeded. Productions such as You Are The Light of the World, religious program, has been accepted enthusiastically and has evolved into a polished show. Rok-Tok is a favorite of the local teens, where they can phone-in their music video requests.

"There's so much more we could do, but we don't have the people," according to the general manager.

The art center, the library, the historical society, the community center and the recreation department are some of the organizations which have utilized local programming, but could vastly expand that use. Ronan explains, "community programming is a great tool for town groups to get their message across."

Although meeting dates and announcements are included in a Bulletin Board format, Ronan says the viewing public wants to see something more than continuous listings. "They want to see their neighbors, friends and relatives on TV. That's what everyone would like to see on Channel 3," he says.

It is a committment of time and energy and enthusiasm for anyone to volunteer their services to community television. But the rewards are visible for all to see, he notes.

"We're really unlimited here," he advises. "If you have ideas for shows you would like to do, then let's talk about it. The only shows that get produced are the ones created by individuals who are willing to spend some time and energy producing it. Besides the work involved, it's great fun."

Chittim adds, "let's get the senior citizens involved, not just the school kids. Let's have community sports, entertainment shows, talk shows. Let's get as many people involved as possible. That is the whole idea behind the cable television license.

"We live in a small town, but it is unusually endowed with talented and interested citizens," Chittim continues, "as well as many cultural resources. The aim is to make interesting citizens interested."

Olympaid exam results

The results of the recent Olympiad Exam sponsored by the Massachusetts Association of Mathematics Leagues indicate Cohasset High School's prowess in this field. Placing in the top ten percent of participants from 146 schools in what Charlie Davis, Math Department Chairman, calls the "toughest exam they'll encounter," were seniors Mason Sandell and John Rattanbury. The other top ranking students by grade were Michael Walsh, grade 12; Jamie Cameron, Geoff Christensen and Beth Perry, grade 11; Susan Riley, James Walsh, and Nicole Prisble, grade 10; Jamie Langmaid, Marybeth McNamara, and Todd DeCruz, grade 9; and an eighth grader invited to take the exam, Arthur Miecham.

The Olympiad is one of several competitions the Cohasset math students enter. On a monthly basis the Senior High School participates in the New England Math League, Computer Science League and the Continental Math League (Calculus), while the Junior High competes monthly in the Continental Math League and the Sigma Math Contest, and twice yearly in the New England Math League.

High scorers in the New England Math League competition were 7th grade students Zack Hochkeppel, Brian Shultz, Kerri Anglin, Juliana Chittick, James Long, and Allison Kornet; and 8th graders Danny Farwell, Cella Mullen, Blake Wiers, Scott Flaherty, Nancy Riley, and Melissa Nothnagle.

These exams are designed to sharpen students' problem-solving skills, a requisite for PSAT and SAT success. Although it is too soon to attribute a rise in scores to this in-depth practice, Mr. Davis predicts results over a five-year period of participation.

This week the Math Lab began review through computerized instruction and teaching aids for students whose PSAT scores fell below class averages, or who feel they need extra work.

Boosters meeting

The March Cohasset Booster meeting will be held at Ruth Medraw's home on Sunday, March 3 at 7 p.m.

All interested persons are invited to attend. We will discuss the upcoming winter sports banquet.

CHS enters drama festival

Saturday, March 2, the Cohasset Drama Workshop will begin its eighth year of participation in the Massachusetts High School Drama Festival when it competes in a regional festival at Rockland High School.

Semi-finalists every year, the workshop has entered the festival and been a state finalist four times.

This year, Cohasset's entry is an adaptation of Peter Dee's "Voices from the High School," which has been prepared for the group by director Ron Emmons. The play presents a series of short scenes dealing with situations faced by high school-aged young people. Excerpts from contemporary rock recordings bridge the gaps between scenes, creating appropriate atmosphere and adding the dimension of what teenagers are hearing to what they are saying.

Appearing in the cast of Voices are seniors Jillian Ayer Kim Harrington, Jim Martin, Shawna McCarthy and Lise Pierotti; juniors Erin Browne, Jacqui Fahey, Glen Hochkeppel, Jen Hynes and John Kuntz; sophomores Jenna Emmons, Andrew Glasfeld and Phillip Mahoney; and freshmen Laura Kuhn and Michelle Meagher. Serving on the technical staff are Jamie Cameron, David Richards and Dan Rossi. Technical advisor is CHS graduate Jeff Rhind of Cohasset Community Television.

This marks the first year since 1980 that a section of the competition has not been scheduled for Cohasset High School. The Executive Board of the Massachusetts High School Drama Guild rejected Cohasset's request to host because of the school's inability to provide reliable stage lighting.

Performances at the Rockland High School regional begin at 10 a.m. After a lunch break, Notre Dame's "Mother Love" will start the afternoon session at 1:20 p.m. with Cohasset's "Voices from the High School" taking the stage at 2:10 p.m.

The public is urged to attend as many shows as possible but is reminded that no one may enter the theater during a performance.

Students in gifted program

Dr. Joseph Harrington announces the acceptance of four Cohasset children into the College Gate program at the Plymouth River School in Hingham this summer. Jessica Jenkins, Rebecca Jenkins, Victoria Maynard, and Dean Volungis will join other bright youngsters in this fast-moving academic program from July 8-26.

Coordinated by Susan Edwards of Green Harbor, the Hingham campus of College Gate offers twenty diverse courses such as chemistry, magic carpet, banging nails, break the code, and foreign languages. Based on the premise that learning is fun, the curriculum meets the academic, motor skills, and interest needs of bright children in small classes taught by experts.

College Gate was founded by Dr. and Mrs. Harrington four summers ago in Natick. It has since expanded to Winchester, Easton, Hingham and Franklin. This will be the third summer at The Plymouth River School.

Amend residency requirement

The Cohasset school committee voted to amend the residency requirement for the school membership at a meeting Feb. 13. The amendment will require non-resident students to pay tuition biannually rather than monthly.

Committee member Martha Gjestaby asked that the committee be given a complete list of tuitioned students.

The committee approved warrant articles of $40,000 and $12,000 to purchase a lighting board and used dump truck.

Ms. Kathleen Bowen was appointed director of the senior class play.

A day of dance in school

The Cohasset Public School physical education department, in conjunction with the PSO, are sponsoring a Day of Dance at the high school March 6.

Under the direction of Master Dancer Steven Markus, students in grades 10, 11, and 12 will observe a performance by the Movement Consort of Boston. The lecture-demonstration will take place in the high school auditorium from 8:40 to 9:20 a.m. Following the demonstration, there will be two workshops in which students will be invited to participate along with the Consort dancers. These workshops will be held at 10:05 a.m. to noon, and from 12:30 to 1:45 p.m.

This event is being funded through a grant from the Institute for the Arts. The idea behind the performance is to give as many students as possible an exposure to the many facets of the arts. The Consort will be peforming modern interpretative dance, combined with some basic ballet and even some breakdancing.

The Consort dancers will be available for afterschool workshops three days a week for three weeks. Students will be working with the dancers during those afterschool workshops, culminating in a final esemble performance March 27. That performance will include teachers and students.

All star Cohasset players in action last week. Now, it's onto the 'states.'

Girl's basketball

By Lisa Shumaker

Seeded third in the state, the varsity girls' basketball team will begin their playoff season against Holbrook Wednesday at 7 p.m. in Cohasset.

Coach Bill Fallon foresees no real problem with Holbrook, for Cohasset has already beaten this team twice by large margins.

Should the Skippers win Wednesday, they will take on either Sandwich or Norwell Saturday at 4 p.m. in Cohasset. Sandwich and Norwell are both tough teams, and whoever Cohasset plays, it will be quite a battle.

Fallon expreses much optimism concerning the tournament and feels his team has as good a chance of going all the way as any other team in Division 3.

Boy's basketball

They are still talking about the 87-52 thrashing to New Bedford, a Division I ranked basketball power.

"In fact no one wanted to leave the gym," said an ecstatic Coach Eddie Minelli who felt his team approached the best level of play he has ever seen.

"No one can believe a Division III school beat a team like New Bedford. We had college coaches and high school coaches and everyone was gaping," Minelli said.

New Bedford, 15-5, called a timeout three times but to no avail A 25-6 run propelled the Skippers to a 46-22 halftime lead and from there "it was a busting out party," said Minelli.

The "Super Six" combination reads like this: Tony Bogarty, 22 points, 14 assists and six steals; Jim Creed, 17 points, 21 rebounds and seven blocked shots; Bryan Edwards, 21 points and 16 rebounds; Phil Bernstein, eight points and 11 rebounds; David MacDonald, eight points and six steals and Bob Schultz, 11 points and five steals.

"They were bigger and quicker but it didn't matter. We put everything together. It was electrifying out there," said Minelli.

With a perfect 20-0 mark and 16-0 in the South Shore League, the Skippers set sail for a Division III state title in the high school basketball tournament.

All the area newspapers have picked Cohasset as the odds on favorite and if the Skippers don't enter the finals, alot of people will be disappointed.

The Skippers, seeded first will not play until Saturday. They wil play either Dover Sherborn or Hopkington at 7 p.m. at CHS in the quarterfinals. The semini final game will be played March 6 and the finals are set for March 9.

Watch next week's Mariner for a special on "Eddie and the Cruisers —Part II."

Cohasset ended its regular season with an overall record of 19-0 and 16-0 in the South Shore League with victories over Sandwich and East Bridgewater.

In addition, Tony Bogarty, Jim Creed, Dave MacDonald and Brian Edwards were named to the league All-Star team and the quartet played well to defeat the Large School counterparts 82-67 Friday night.

Against Sandwich, Edwards scored 24 points to lead the attack. Bogarty added 15 points and MacDonald and Creed each scored eight points.

Coach Ed Minelli said six other players scored as he freely substituted.

In the East Bridgewater game, Bogarty scored 29 and Edwards hit for 24 points. MacDonald added 11 points and Bobby Schultz came off the bench to score 12 points.

The team will face off against New Bedford, ranked fifth in Division I Friday at home at 7 p.m. Minelli said this game is very significant because New Bedford is a well known and excellent Division I team. Because of Cohasset's population, the Skippers are in Division III.

Roadrace March 31

Plans for the ninth annual Cohasset Roadrace by the Sea are well underway.

The race will again be sponsored by the Cohasset Rotary Club. All proceeds from the Race are put towards the Club's scholarship fund or other in town projects. The event will again be directed by Peter Logan and Roy Fitzsimmons Sunday March 31 at 1 p.m.

As in the past, registration will be limited to the first 800 runners for the 10 K race that travels along Atlantic Ave. and Jerusalem Road back to the Town Common. In the past, the runners have come from all New England states and as far away as Arizona. Although, the majority come from Cohasset and Scituate keeping the race a local sign of Spring. Runners have ranged in age from seven to sixty-eight.

All entrants will receive a T-shirt with the race logo, sponsored by local businesses. Refreshments wil be served at the finish including hot dogs, soda and beer. The deadline for registration is March 26 but due to the limited number of runners it is suggested that people register early. The entry fee is $5. Applications are available at various businesses including Colonial Pharmacy, Cohasset Liquors, Good Sport and Harbor Liquors or by writing Roadrace, P.O. Box 36, Cohasset 02025.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician
SUBTLE SUBLUXATIONS
The slightest pressure on a spinal nerve root, as it emerges from the spine, can reduce the function of that nerve by 60 percent in a matter of minutes. Research has also found that the same degree of pressure exerted for one to three hours in an average person's spine caused many of the nerve fibers and nerve roots to rupture. They then produced poisons which spread to the surrounding tissues. When absorbed into the nerves, the poisons will, in time, progressively destroy them. While everyone recognizes that a severe spinal injury may cause paralysis, people tend to overlook the more subtle effects of vertebral subluxation (misalignment). However, a subluxation can result in pressure on the same nerves, causing a condition of decreased activity which amounts to a slight paralysis.
Proper alignment allows for proper function of the spine thus allowing for the entire body, from head to foot, to react properly. Misalignments cause "mal-function." The science of chiropractic offers valid approaches to deal with your desires and needs. A periodic chiropractic exam serves as a preventive measure. around town

☐ Julie Hoogeveen, daughter of Larry and Dotty Hoogeveen, has certainly "found her niche." A student at Wheaton College, she was named to the Dean's List for the fall semester. Julie, a freshman, was also nominated for the Wheaton Scholar program, a selective program in which honors students (limited to eight per class) may construct their own major not already offered at Wheaton. Julie's Wheaton Scholar Program is in Sports Medicine, and it focuses on independent study and research. In addition she plans to complete a traditional major in selective English Writing/ Literature major. She has also been asked to submit an essay to Wheaton's Midnight Oil, an annual publication of students' outstanding works. Also active in extracurricular activities, Julie is a Student Athletic Trainer, fourth runner on Wheaton's varsity Cross-Country team, plays indoor soccer, and is an Intramural Dorm Representative. Currently, Julie and another runner are organizing a new track club at Wheaton.

☐ And, some more news on another CHS grad, this time it's Thomas Ryan, Class of 1983. Tom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ryan of Hillside Drive, is a Pre-Med student at University of Mass at Amherst and has made the Dean's List again, with a 4.0 average again!! Tom has attained Dean's List every semester since he began attending college.

☐ Linda Morano sent me a note this week, wanting everyone to be sure they knew about Teri Finegan. Terry is a 1983 graduate of CHS and recently performed in the Providence College production of "The Dining Room." Teri is an advertising major at Providence College.

☐ It's "States Time" at CHS . . . the cheerleaders will kick things off with a rally on Tuesday and the girls begin their bid on Wednesday. Saturday, both the girls and the boys will play here, with the girls game at 4:00 and the boys game at 7:00. Best of luck to the two teams . . . would sure be nice to see some new trophies in the display case!

☐ Friday is a day to mark on your calendar. The Beechwood Congregational Church is holding their famous chowder luncheon from 11:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. Absolutely the best chowder around, and everyone knows it, so be early! The reason for the luncheon is World Day of Prayer.

☐ Congratulations to the Seahawks and all of their hard work over the weekend in their tournament.

☐ The following area students were named to the Xaverian Brothers High School Principal's List, First Honors and Second Honors Programs for the second marking period of the 1984-1985 school year:

Second Honors: (80 percent and above), Theodore Thibodeau, Scituate; Herbert Bourgault, Hanover; John Bourgault, Hanover.

Principal's List: (90 percent and above), Thomas McNamee, Scituate; James Newman, Hingham.

First Honors: (85 percent and above), Christopher Spellman, Hingham; and Second Honors: (80 percent and above), Paul Stanford, Cohasset.

☐ A speedy recovery to Pop Fone, who is to be operated on as this is being written.

☐ Mark A. Caughey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard W. Caughey of Pond Street, and C. Andrew Long, son of Mrs. Camille Long of Linden Drive, have attained Dean's List status, the second highest recognition for academic achievement for the fall term at Middlebury College.

Students who receive this designation at Middlebury must have earned four B's or better during the semester.

☐ Three real estate brokers in the Cohasset office of Gallery 360 were among the top 20 brokers in the firm's nine South Shore offices, according to Gallery 360 Vice President Tom Hamilton.

In addition to winning a trip to Puerto Rico, each was inducted into the exclusive Gallery 360 Compass Club, which honors brokers for their outstanding sales achievements.

Those earning honors from the Cohasset office were Claire Shields, who was the number two Gallery 360 broker as well as the office broker of the year, Shirley Tolan and Ruth Keefe.

☐ Staci Stobart and Elizabeth Riley, both seniors, have been named Finalists in the National Merit Scholarship Program. Certainly an honor, fewer than one-half of one percent of American High School seniors are selected as Finalists in the competition. Staci has also been selected as a candidate for the Presidential Scholars program, which is designed to recognize the most outstanding senior students in the country. Staci is one of 1500 students nationally to be initially selected, from more than 3 million!

☐ It seems that some motivated club or organization should be planning to make "box lunches" and tons of coffee for the up-coming town meeting. It's sure to be a long one.

☐ Jack McNeill is a busy man at Boston College as he makes his bid for Class President. All Cohassetites are rooting for him, and those that are students at BC are busy helping him any way they can. Will let you know the results.

☐ That's it for this week . . . be sure to let us know what you did over vacation. There must be tons of news as the town was almost like a ghost town, with everyone skiing or sunning or just escaping. Let me know!!!

Week in review

Some observations from the past week.

The local elections can muster little more than a yawn at this point. But let's give it all we've got and create an exciting campaign. There are plenty of issues to discuss, even though most incumbents are unopposed.

One interesting question which was overheard this week was,"I wonder how the selectmen candidates feel about keeping the Town Hall stage?" That is not an earth-shattering issue, but one that has fueled a lot of discussions in town. Certainly the candidate who pleases the most voters has a better chance than one who espouses the least-favored opinion. Let's see how the candidates fare on this one.

This week, Town Accountant Bill Signorelli announced his resignation, effective April 22. It almost goes without saying that he will be sorely missed at Town Hall (although we're sure he would prefer we not say anything at all). He has been, to this newspaper and its current and past editors, an accessible, open and helpful public employee. Without a moment to spare in his busy day, he would politely share his time to answer a question, to seek an answer.

When previous editors were informed of his pending resignation, they all had the same reaction. "What a great guy. I wonder who's going to take his place?"

A replacement for Bill is an impossibility. We can only hope that his successor is half as capable and accommodating as he.

Our best wishes for a long, healthy and happy retirement!

Congratulations to both the girls and the boys high school basketball teams. What a town, where champions are born and bred. The high school is fairly busting at the seams with tension and excitement brought on by the state tournies.

We wish both teams the best of luck. Don't be overconfident. Play your best and know that all of us are hoping for the best. Whatever the outcome, thanks for a great season!

Just a note to make sure all our readers glance at page two. The Board of Health has issued a notice about the continuation of glass recycling at the landfill. There has been a lot of confusion about whether the recycling is on or off. It is definitely still on, so please read that notice carefully.

Have a great week, and let's hope we can start a front page story next week detailing the victories of our basketball squads (and, the end of all court litigation against the town, the granting of all funds necessary to begin the sewer project, the completion of police and fire union negotiations, and a contract signed with a new executive secretary).

Another committee vacancy

Peter Laugelle has notified selectmen of his intended resignation from the Advisory Board of Wompatuck State Park. Selectmen said they will accept his resignation as soon as a replacement is found and appointed.

Anyone interested in serving on the park advisory board is urged to contact the selectmen's office.

Introducing Dr. Strangeloan

By Claire McDonough

Flora and Fauna had just joined me for coffee when my son Patrick stormed into the kitchen.

"Have you heard?" he demanded. "Our student loans are in jeopardy."

Fauna patted his hand reassuringly. "Now dear," she soothed, "don't get upset. We all have to make some sacrifices to help our government pay off the deficit. You don't want to be unpatriotic, do you?"

Flora stared at her in disbelief. "Did you say what I thought you said?" she asked. "Why should Patrick have to pay off the deficit?"

Fauna shrugged. "Someone has to. And it's not as if we weren't all asked to give up something. If Bill and I hadn't sold our vacation home last year, we'd still be paying interest on it, but we wouldn't be able to declare it on our income tax. And I'm sure we would have been only too happy to help out."

"But," Flora reminded her, "all four of your kids got student loans."

"I know," Fauna admitted, "but the deficit was never this big before.

"And, anyway," she added, "my youngest just graduated. Why should I have to pay for someone else's?"

She smiled sweetly at Patrick.

"Didn't your mother tell me you favor divestiture?"

Patrick groaned. "I know what you're going to say. And I've already been divested of stereos and automobiles and summers at expensive resorts. Before I ever got them."

"Really, dear? Then I guess you'll just have to give up your prestigious, expensive institution and go to a state university."

Patrick sighed. "I've been at UMass Boston for two years. And I work two jobs. Have you any idea what books cost?"

"I can't be expected to keep track of every tiny detail, and neither can our President," Fauna told him.

"Look," Flora expostulated, "there are kids all over the country in Pat's situation. Their parents have several college aged kids, the price of everything is sky high, and they just can't make it without the same kind of help your kids got when they were in college."

"I'm sure they'll be glad to delay their education for a few years," Fauna told her. "After all, our President's already three years behind on his promise to balance the budget. What are you trying to do? Make him look bad?"

I silently poured more coffee, then Fauna brightened.

"Patrick, you're a biology major," she pointed out. "That makes you a scientist. Scientists do research. Why don't you be a good boy and figure out a way for the President to handle the deficit without having people get mad at him."

"You're right. I can probably get a federal grant for my project, too. Maybe I can get set up at Harvard, and with a little luck I can parlay it straight through to a PhD."

"That's nice, dear," Fauna told him. "What are you going to call your project?"

"I've got a great title," Patrick replied.

"How to Learn to Stop Worrying and Love the Deficit."

Clarifications on library article

Thank you for your fine story on the proposed 15-town library computer system, the Old Colony Library Network. Without wishing to seem fussy about some minor misstatements, I would like to clarify some points.

1. It would not be true to say "funding for public libraries is on the decline." People value libraries too much to let that happen. Funding has not kept up with inflation, however. So rising labor costs are cutting into open hours and book purchases. In some citiers and towns library funding has been reduced as a result of tax caps. President Reagan has consistently tried to eliminate federal aid to libraires and may succeed this term.

2. We expect to be approved in June for a federal grant of $450,000, which will pay for the central computer and software to support the 15-town system. This may be the last year federal funds are available. Another grant of $100,00 has already been awarded by the state-supported regional library program. Together, these grants will pay more than half the total cost for hardware (including local terminals), software, and central site preparation. The $30,000 we are asking of the town for equipment is less than half the total cost, the balance to be paid by the grants. Another $20,000 is needed for one-time labor and materials to convert the card catalog to computer files, and to process our 45,000 books for computerized checkout, check-in, and inventory control.

3. The libraries presently planning to join the Old Colony Network are: Abington, Braintree, Canton, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Marshfield, Norwell, Plymouth, Quincy, Rockland, Scituate, Sharon, Stoughton, and Walpole. At least nine other towns are considering joining in another year. The library trustees in each of these towns must seek local support of Advisory Committees, Capital Budget Committees, Selectmen, Town Administrators, Mayors, City Councils, and Town Meetings. We can't say now which will succeed. Sixty Massachusetts public libraries have gone through this

Rehearsal for 'Morning's at Seven'

The Cohasset Dramatic club's midwinter show can be seen this weekend (week of Feb. 25 to March 3) at the Cohasset Town Hall.

The play is Paul Osborn's favorite, "Morning's At Seven," directed by Denise Ripley. Show times are Friday and Saturday, March 1 and 2 at 8 p.m. and Sunday, March 3 at 2 p.m. Senior citizens are invited to see either the final dress rehearsal at 8 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 28 or the Sunday, March 3 matinee as guests of the dramatic club, at no charge.

Cast members of "Morning's At Seven" are: Barbara Elliott, Betty Miessner, Alice Duffy, Julia Jordan, Fran Cranford, Joe Coyle, Wayne Miessner, George Hamacher and Peter Tolman. Co-producers of the show are Harry Heineman and John Kuhn, the set designer is Sheldon Ripley, and lighting effects are by Tom and Joyce Finegan, Beth Colburn is the stage manager and Justine Thurston is stage secretary.

"Morning's At Seven," written in 1939 and voted a Best Play of the 1980 Broadway season, has been a favorite with amateur and community theater groups for many years. A revival on the Boston stage played to large audiences recently, demonstrating the continuing popularity of playwright Osborn's best known work.

Tickets for the Cohasset production are $4, and may be purchased at the door or in advance at Fleming's, Cohasset Center.

ZBA reviews King Street subdivision

At the Zoning Board of Appeals hearing last week, Dr. Patrick Morrissey requested a special permit. Morrissey is hoping to construct an eight-unit subdivision on about two and one-half acres of land off King Street.

In order to do that, he must have a new road built for the construction.

Engineer, Henry Nover, representing Dr. Morrissey, demonstrated that 160 square feet of wetlands needed to be filled to allow for the road. Morrissey intends to provide a compensatory low area of 2720 square feet to allow for drainage. Nover pointed out that the damage will not cause pollution. He also offered that the wetlands have the capacity to protect persons and their property and to retain the water table. "There is adequate state water storage and the runoff will continue in the same direction winding up within the subdivision."

Representing opposition to the plan was Paul Barens. Barens expressed concern over the possibility of water draining onto his property which is located in the vicinity of King Steet. Planning Board member Robert Sturdy, objected saying that the plans approved by his board are different, and therefore Morrissey will have to resubmit them.

Although the Conservation Commission has yet to make a decision, they have concerns about the possibility of a pollution problem. The Board of Health has determined the subdivision falls within its watershed moratorium district and has refused permission for the construction of any septic systems.

The Appeals Board is waiting for a copy of the revised plans and the Assessors map of Barens' property.

The board also reviewed plans submitted by engineers Neil Murphy and Gary Sisson, representing Ruth Sisson of 392 South Main Street. In 1984, the Zoning Board denied Mrs. Sisson a special permit to build on an adjoining lot. A small corner of the lot is located partially in the floodplain and therefore a variance is needed in order to install a septic system.

Murphy stated there would be no problem with pollution because every regulation was met im more magnitude than required. Murphy presented a letter of approval from the Conservation Commission dated February 19. Murphy feels that the Board of Health will grant permission for the septic system only if the Zoning Board allocates a variance.

The board heard favorable responses from Sissons' neighbors, Bill Stone and Grace Tuckerman. A letter of support from the Cahil family was presented. Cahil volunteered that the tides never reached as high as Murphy's proposed plan, except for the unavoidable storm of 1978.

The board felt that this case was representative of all the surrounding flood plained areas and if the variance was granted there would be a problem with many other lots seeking variances. The board decided since the land may be subject to flooding they denied a variance request to install a septic system.

The board voted in favor of the Reese Davis case which has been in litigation for some time. Davis purchased his home in 1983 and at that time, appealed to board for a variance. Assuming there was a building permit, the board said he needed no relief because the house had been built in 1972.

According to Town Hall officials, the building permit is nowhere to be found. Reese is relocated and wants to sell his house. Because the house is six inches too close to the property line, he needs a variance.

The board reconsidered the need for a variance after learning about the missing building permit and granted Reese the six inches.

Arrest made in Cohasset robbery

A Marshfield man was arraigned in Hingham District Court Monday morning on seven charges in connection with the break into a Hingham home last October in which two family members were tied up and gagged and a third was assaulted.

Gary E. Guptill, 19, of 515 South River St., Marshfield, pleaded innocent to the charges of burglary and armed assault, armed assault in a dwelling, armed robbery while masked, possession of a firearm in the commission of a felony, and three charges of assault and battery with a deadly weapon.

Bail was set at $75,000 surety or $7,500 cash and a pre-trial hearing was set for next Monday.

Hingham Det. Lt. Edmond Burgess said he and State Trooper William Dunderdale had the Guptill house under observation over the weekend and arrested Guptill Monday morning at 8 a.m. as he arrived at the house.

In the incident early in the evening of Oct. 27, two masked men carrying sawed-off shotguns burst into the Cirone house on East Street in Hingham. Police had thought they hoped to find the whole family at home and to then hold the family hostage while taking the Jerry P. Cirone, owner of Cohasset Jewelry, to his store to open the vault.

But the attackers missed the entire family at dinner by only minutes. Other family members had left the house after an early meal to do numerous errands before a family Halloween party planned for that night. Antoinette Cirone was alone in the family room in the house when the two men entered. They gagged and tied her up and shut her in a closet.

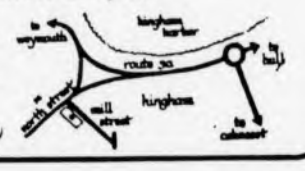
When the Cirone son, Donald, entered the house, and saw a masked figure coming up the stairs from the ground floor, he assumed at first it was an early party guest. But then the two intruders allegedly hit him with the sawed-off shotguns, knocking him to the floor and leaving him semi-conscious.

Donald's wife, Donna, was waiting in the car for him. When he didn't return, she went into the house, only to be gagged and tied by the pair and put into another closet.

Daughter Debbie was the next one home and noticed her brother's car with the engine running in front of the house. As she came in the front door, the two men confronted her. She turned and ran out of the house and next door to her grandmother's house for help, from where she called the police.

The two intruders then fled, taking Donna Cirone's purse, a ring and other jewelry. The purse was later recovered up the street at the parking lot adjoining Route 228 and Glastonbury Abbey.

Police had figured there were four persons involved in the plan, including a driver who kept in touch with the two inside by walkie-talkie, as well as a fourth person who was stationed outside Cohasset Jewelry, which the Cirone family owns, to keep a lookout when the other three were to bring the elder Cirone to the store.



Investigating officers in the case were Troopers Dunderdale and Edward Whalen and Hingham officers Burgess, Det. Gerald McInnis, Off. James Taylor, and Sgt. Paul Cadigan.

THE OLD HAWAII

Most people who dream of Hawaii as a remote paradise are disenchanted by their initial experience on Oahu, the urban center of the state. However, the best-kept secret in the islands is the North Shore, windward Oahu. Here, you can still sun and snorkel in seclusion along pristine stretches of deserted white beach. Dine by candlelight on the veranda of an elegant inn and enjoy Polynesian drinks at sunset while surfers battle giant waves. Luxuriate in a moonlit suite in a first-class hotel with the soothing sounds of waves outside your lanai. In short, the North Shore is Hawaii as you might have imagined. It is only 40 minutes from Honolulu; close enough to head into town for dinner.

When planning a vacation there are so many ways in which you can save money. First, many carriers offer special rates or travel packages unknown to the lay person. Secondly, hotels and resort accomodations can vary greatly in price within the same area and within the same establishment. When planning your next trip, let the professional team at COLPITTS TRAVEL CENTER assist you. There is never a charge to you for our services. We are located at 3 Brook St., Scituate. It's a long way from Fenway Park to Scituate

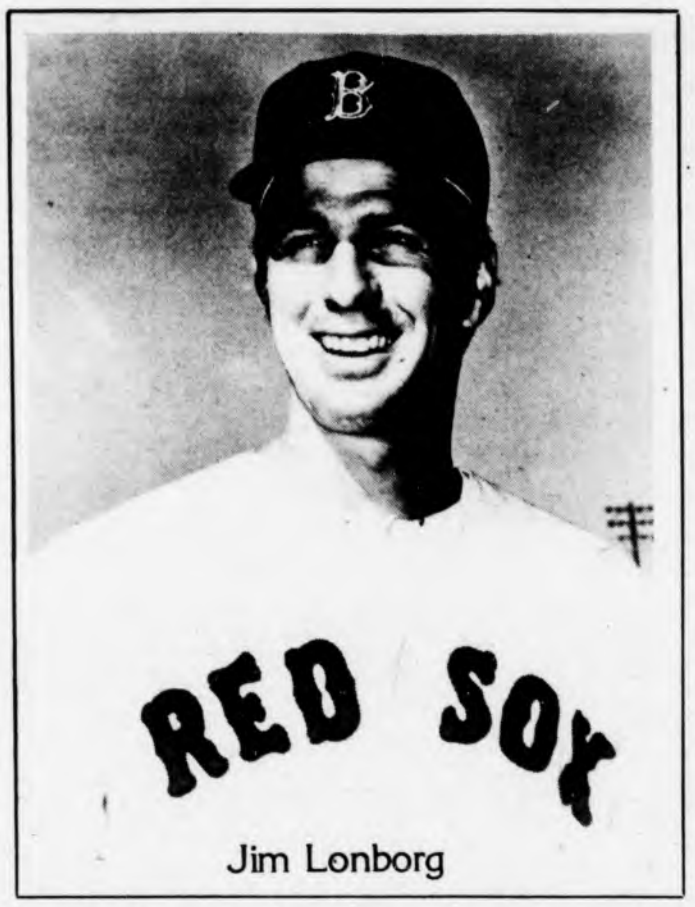
"Gentleman Jim," still remains the humble, soft-spoken man who endeared himself to baseball fans in the magic year of 1967.

Now Dr. James Lonborg, a certified dentist practicing in Hanover,Lonborg enthralled the Scituate Chamber of Commerce audience with amusing sports stories but also left them with a few words of wisdom about hard work, patience and organization.

Lonborg depicted highlights of his professional baseball pitching career which spanned more than 14 years following his graduation from Stanford University in 1964 with a bachelor of arts degree in biology.

He first played pro baseball with minor league teams in Winston Salem, North Carolina and Seattle, Washington., before joining the Boston Red Sox in 1965.

Jim was a member of the "Impossible Dream" team which won the World Series in 1967. With a record of 22-9, he captured the Cy Young Award for the best pitching record in the American League.



In 1972, he left the Red Sox to pitch for the Milwaukee Brewers for one season and then was traded to the Philadelphia Phillies where he played in the World Series in 1975, 1976 and 1977.

He retired from baseball in 1979, moved with his family to Scituate and enrolled in Tufts Dental School. He graduated in 1983.

Jim began with his funniest story as he discovered Boston in 1965. "You have to remember that it's 1965 and in those days it was long haired hippies, snapping fingers.

"I had just gotten off the plane from Scottsdale, Arizona and we were staying at the Kenmore Hotel. I asked how do you get to Fenway Park. The bellman told me, take a left and keep on walking. You can't miss it."

"Well, I kept on walking and I ended up at Emanuel College. I asked a guy on the corner where Fenway Park was? He said, while snapping his fingers, 'practice man, practice man.'

Jim Lonborg

In his first major league game, Lonborg faced the Baltimore Orioles. "I felt confident, I felt I knew what I was doing. I came in early, ran, went over the reports and then showered.

"Then the lead off man Paul Blair laid down a bunt and it meant a 15-foot throw to first base for the out. Sure enough, I threw it over the first baseman's head.

"You learn more from your mistakes than winning 10-0 and striking out 14 men. I'll tell you one thing, I never overthrew first base again."

During the summer of 1967, Lonborg threw a no-hitter for seven innings but lost it when he gave up a hit in the bottom of the eighth inning.

"In the bottom of the ninth inning, I gave up a hit, an out, a walk, and another hit. The score was 1-1 and a runner was on third. It was two outs and two strikes on the batter. I threw a curveball in the dirt, the catcher couldn't find the ball and we lost."

"Shortstop Rico Petrocelli came over to me at the end of the game and said, 'Hell of a game Jim." Manager Dick Williams still sitting on the end of the bench looked up and said, "Hell of a game, my (rear end) !

Lonborg remembered the time he first faced legend Mickey Mantle and struck him out. "The next time he hit a 380 foot homerun, the next time a 420 foot homerun and then he doubled off the top of the wall."

Radatz, said Lonborg, was a legend in himself. He faced Mantle 63 times and struck him out 46 times.

What's changed since Lonborg left professional baseball? Salaries for starters. In 1965, Lonborg was paid $4,500, in 1966, $6,200 and in 1967 graduated to a top salary of $12,000.

Lonborg acknowledged the Boston fans are more sympathetic than the Philadelphia fans who boo viciously.

He also candidly said unless the Boston Red Sox ownership is finally settled and "Buddy" (LeRoux) gets out, the Red Sox are in no position to win a championship.

The most practical job-related characteristic Lonborg has brought from the pitching mound to the dentist chair is organization.

"Before I pitched a game, I would always think about procedure and all the things which could possibly go wrong. I think of all the mistakes which could possibly go wrong and think of how to make it right and how to alleviate your mistakes."

How did Jim end up in Scituate? He went to a dinner party in Norwell and met a real estate agent who said, "I have this great house in Scituate. I have to go over there to lock up. Do you want to go? At that time we were looking at houses and at first it was a little more expensive than we thought. But here we are today."

'Scapino' tryouts scheduled for March 9-10

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will hold tryouts for its spring production of Frank Dunlop and Jim Dale's adapted comedy "Scapino" Saturday, March 9 and Sunday March 10 at 2 p.m. on the Town Hall stage, Cohasset.

Directing the play is Ellen Kelly who directed the Club's 1982 production of the modern play "Scenes From American Life."

"Scapino" is a two-act comedy, an adaptation of Moliere's "The Follies of Scapin." The adapted version takes place in an Italian restaurant on the edge of the Bay of Naples. The cast of characters calls for a minimum of 14 but in such a zany setting as that of "Scapino" who knows how many more additional characters may walk in through the door?

Basically,saysDirectorEllen Kelly,thetaleisthis: Take two elder gentlemen, Argante and Geronte. Take also their respective sons, Ottavio and Leandro. Now send the two older men out of town for a few days to make a certain deal, the deal being, Argante would like to have Ottavio marry the daughter and thereby the fortune of Geronte . . . The plot of "Scapino" thickens as a hired rogue named Sylvestro tries to keep an eye on Ottavio, and Leandro is being supervised by an even "roguier" rogue names Scapino.

As might be expected, some girls catch the eyes of two young men, and the plot evolves. Waiters (perhaps singing), waitresses, pretty girls, maybe even some gypsies, and a Harpo Marx type named Carlo help fill out the story. "Scapino" is broad comedy at its best, and there's room for plenty of comedy.

Playdates will be April 25 through 28. Scripts for "Scapino" are available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Cohasset.

Boston Ballet tickets still available

Tickets for the March 2 Hingham performance of the Boston Ballet Ensemble are available now. At $5 each, tickets are on sale at Hingham Square Bookshop, the Hingham Public Library, and at Foster Elementary School.

Three short ballets for children and families will be highlighted by an opportunity to ask questions of Ensemble dancers.

A raffle will be held at the conclusion of the performance featuring Boston Ballet memorabilia as well as valuable gift certificates. Refreshments will be served during intermission.

Set aside the afternoon of Sunday, March 3 at 2 p.m. to treat your children to a real dance experience at the Hingham High School auditorium. Proceeds will replenish funds for the Rosenberger Arts Fund of the Foster School P.T.O., used to offset costs of those artistic and cultural enrichment programs presented to the school's children.

CREATURE COMFORTS

By Elisabeth Gorfinkle

"I want a small, short-haired, female kitten," I told my roommate Kristin, as we walked off the subway platform.

It was autumn three years ago in Chicago. We took a right off a main street and soon stood on a white house's porch that glistened with wet leaves. We had arrived at Treehouse, a nonprofit, private adoption agency for abandoned and stray cats.

At the time, the agency was filled to bursting with every shape, breed and age of feline imaginable. A good 150 of them roamed free in rooms filled with carpeted sculpt ures meant for play and shelter. The remaining 70 or so were in the nursery, in recovery cages or in quarantine.

The cats came from all corners of the city. Some had always been alley cats. Others had taken to the streets after running away or being abandoned. Only a few had been lucky enough to have missed the horrors of street living before arriving at the shelter.

Treehouse's policy was to provide needed medical care, including the necessary shots, spays and neuterings. The adopting "parents" were given written guarantees that the animals were in good health. In return, the parents signed a lengthy adoption agreement and paid a modest fee for services rendered.

Outside of cats suffering from or carrying incurable, lethal diseases, no cats were readily put to sleep (euthanized).

A Treehouse attendent had said, "It happens every time. Even the most withdrawn animals, when they see the people they want, they go after them. And those people, no matter what they thought they were coming here for, go home with those cats."

Kristen and I named the cat Pierre.

Pierre is a stunning animal, with golden eyes and a rich coat almost the color of mink. He is gentle, attentive and extremely well behaved. He now lives a contented life with my parents in Hingham.

Many prospective owners believe adult cats and dogs are not desirable pets, especially those found in shelters or wandering the streets.

Adult animals deserve equal consideration. Animal control officers, humane society personnel and many owners believe adult strays make exemplary pets.

For example, Jill Yagar, a Mariner proofreader from Hanover, said a large black stray followed her daughter Sabina home nine years ago.

"Someone must have beaten the dog, because she would cringe whenever a man would approach, especially if he raised his hand. She would then shake and tremble. It was sad to see," Jill said.

"Misty was shy for about two years, but now she's great. She is good, loyal, everything you would want a dog to be," she said.

The average euthanasia rate for animals handled by either animal control agencies or humane societies is close to 70 percent, according to a 10-year study conducted by the American Humane Association (AHA) based in Denver. The association is a nonprofit and tax-exempt animal welfare organization.

From 1974 through 1983, AHA systematically collected data from 140 agencies nationwide. The sample provided significant data that reveals some trends in animal control and sheltering, AHA claims.

For instance, cat ownership is on the rise, increasing from 43 million in 1975 to 52 million in 1983. And the euthanasia rate for sheltered cats is much higher than for dogs, because fewer cats are redeemed by owners.

"While about 11 percent of dogs are redeemed, only 1 percent of the cats ever get back to their owners," according to an interpretation of the study published in AHA's summer edition of Advocate, a quarterly magazine.

AHA urges animal control officers and animal welfare organizations to ask people to license and tag their cats, along with their dogs, so owners can be contacted. Cat owners also should be informed to start searching their neighborhoods and visiting local shelters immediately.

The animal control officers of Hingham, Cohasset, Norwell, Hull, Hanover and Scituate are having a difficult time following AHA's advice, according to Hingham's ACO Paul Murphy.

Stray cats are brought to local veterinarians to be euthanized, Murphy said.

"I Ought To Be . . ." Needs to go fast forward

By Judith Montminy

THEATRE REVIEW

Picture a 45 PRM pop record that is being played as if it is a classical LP, and you have a good idea of what is wrong with the Nickerson Theatre Production of Neil Simon's comedy "I Ought To Be In Pictures."

What makes the pacing problem particularly disappointing is that there are some very tender moments in the play that are practically lost because every scene is played as if it is a slice of "Real Life."

Director John Fogle has failed to capture the essence of Simon — fast-paced repartees that leave the audience breathless from laughing at the funny-sad mess of relationships onstage.

"I Ought To Be In Pictures" takes a 19 year-old Brooklyn girl who hasn't seen her father in 16 years and sends her hitchhiking to California to find him. He is a one-time successful script writer and she wants him to help her get into pictures. Or at least, that is what she says she wants. What Libby is really looking for is some assurance that her father really loved her all those years he was missing from her life. Imagine Herb's surprise when he gets out of bed one morning and finds his daughter in his living room.

Problem number one: Dori Arnold's Libby has a Brooklyn accent that is self-conscious and phony. All her energy goes into getting the sing-songing nasalities right. She would have been better off trying to focus more on Libby's brassiness and bravado. Instead her character concerns herself with keeping up the appearance of being busy, without getting a grip on who Libby really is and what motivates her. Even in comedy, the characters need to seem real. Libby, in this production, is a caricature.

It's the little bits that make a character real that are missing. Anyone who has spent three weeks hitchhiking with a backpack and says she doesn't even notice when it's on her back should know how to open and close it with a reasonable amount of dexterity. And why does she put her hat in it, take it out, put it in, and take it out again? Either the property person forgot to fill the backpack with the required props or the director has told the actress to look busy and nervous. Either way, the maneuvers are distracting and don't add to the character portrayal.

And why is she dressed in that outlandish outfit? It may be hard for New Englanders to believe, but even someone from Brooklyn can look kooky and flamboyant without looking like a fool. Libby's clothes don't make sense. The script calls for her to be dressed in shorts for her cross-country trek, but the girl isn't totally oblivious to what others think !

Problem number two: Randall Forsythe plays Herb, Libby's father, as if he is Walter Matthau. Matthau has a posture that is his physical trademark and Forsythe does a good job of imitating that posture. But if we wanted to see Walter Matthau as Herb Tucker, we could have gone to see the film version of "I Ought To Be In Pictures." There are moments in the play when Forsythe gets down to the core of Herb's character and discovers for himself the pain and uncertainty of a man who walked out on his wife and two children and is no longer able to work at his craft. Unfortunately, those moments are obscured by Forsythe's posturing a la Matthau. It would have been refreshing to see Forsythe's interpretation of the part, not his interpretation of Walter Matthau doing the part.

Problem number three: Where is the kookiness of these characters? Simon has created characters who are little off center, but who can be lovable, moving and interesting. The Nickerson Theatre's production lacks the sense of fun needed in "I Ought To Be In Pictures."

What's right with the production? For one, Stephanie Voss as Herb's girlfriend Steffy. She's the most natural, the most accurately paced, and the most consistent. And she seems as if she is the most comfortable with her surroundings.

Act Two works far better than Act One. Curiously, Act Two has fewer punch lines and concerns itself with the developing relationship between father and daughter. There are some poignant moments when Libby questions her father about personal issues — why he really left, how he felt, what it really feels like when you love someone. His responses are touching. How much more touching they could have been if they came in contrast to the fast-paced comedy of Act One. But the fast-paced comedy of Act One is not part of the Nickerson Theatre's "I Ought To Be In Pictures." Too bad.

"I Ought To Be In Pictures" is playing at the Nickerson Theatre in Norwell through March 9, Tuesday through Sunday. A Saturday matinee has been scheduled for Feb. 23.

Performances are Tuesday through Thursday at 8 p.m., Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m., and Sunday at 2 and 7 p.m.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

In preparing this series I have gone into quite a bit of history. History, it seems to me, gives us a sense of perspective, and therefore a sense of hope as we begin to consider the enormous task before us if we wish to bequeath a decent transportation system to those who will follow. Without a sense of history, today's outlook is bleak, for much of what we need to do we probably won't be able to do any time soon.

For a quarter of a century we have depended on the federal government for so-called "ten cent dollars" to finance major road and rail improvements. Today the United States of America faces an unprecedented deficit that almost certainly will result in a major reduction of funds available for new transportation projects.

Massachusetts does have a budget surplus, but here transportation competes with education, human services, community needs, tax reduction, and many other worthy demands when dollars are divvied up. It also competes with waste, inefficiency, corruption, and political patronage, which is one of the reasons it is so hard these days to argue for government action when, as in the case of the transportation issue, it is so truly needed.

Finally, the transportation dollar itself has to be divided up among worthy projects. If the completion of Rte. 25 in Bristol County and the reconstruction of Rte.44 between Middleborough and Plymouth are added to the rail and road projects I have suggested in this series, a good case can be made for spending $3 billion in Southeastern Massachusetts. Yet in Franklin County, where unemployment is high, folks are equally justifiably concerned about the completion of Rte. 2 where it remains a two-lane road.

Obviously, therefore, neither a 12-lane Rte. 3 nor a comprehensive 70 mile-per-hour commuter rail system is going to be built before 1990. Should we therefore give up on these projects? Absolutely not, for some combination of them is vital to our economic future. We should plan them and lobby for them and hope we do them, if not by 1990, then by 2000. A region that waited nearly 300 years to build the Cape Cod Canal can keep sight of its goals while it waits. We should remember that the projects we seek to implement, though immense, are not nearly as big as building the Canal was in Theodore Roosevelt's day. The historical perspective helps.

What can we do in the interim? Several things.

The first is to devise a comprehensive master plan outlining what we want to do, one that leaves no Southeastern Massachusetts community left out and no aspect of the overall problem unlooked at. We must decide what combination of the road and the railroad we wish to build . . . regardless of the present feasibility of so doing. Only with a comprehensive master plan can we effectively lobby for segments of that plan, and only with a master plan can we avoid the pitfall previous planners fell into of creating one transportation mess as we solved another.

The second is to manage the road system we have better than we have done to date. The Department of Public Works made important strides in this regard in preparing for the 1984-86 emergency repair of the Expressway. But more can be done on Rte. 3 itself and on secondary roads. For example, one daily nuisance on the southbound commute is the point just before the South Hingham exit where Rte.3 narrows from three lanes to two. The jam that chronically takes place there could be largely solved if white lines were painted beginning soon after the previous exit (Rte 18) directing through traffic to the two left lanes and leading traffic in the right lane exclusively to the exit.

More can be done to rationalize commuter traffic on secondary roads such as Rte.138, Granite Ave., etc. Anyone who has seen how much volume 2nd and 3rd Avenues carry in and out of New York City every day can appreciate that these secondary arteries, though not the long-term answer to the problem, have some untapped potential. In New York City it is all done with synchronized traffic lights.

Third, bus service can be greatly improved. The trouble with both M.B.T.A. and Plymouth & Brockton bus service is that it doesn't sufficiently target individual communities. For example, to take a bus from Duxbury to Boston you either have to take a local up Rte 53 that doesn't get on Rte 3 until Hingham; or you have to take an alternative local that goes through Marshfield and takes nearly and hour and a half one way to Boston.

What is needed is direct bus service from the downtown areas of each Southeastern Massachusetts Community, buses that once they leave the originating town, express to Boston. Different towns will require different numbers of buses per day, but only if even the smaller communities have direct service to Boston (with perhaps a connection to the Red Line on the way) is the public likely to use it in numbers to ease traffic on Rtes. 3 and 24. It may be time to subsidize Plymouth & Brockton service in certain instances.

As to the M.B.T.A., many of its present bus routes were layed out as trolley lines around 1910, and haven't been altered since, despite enormous demographic changes. The M.B.T.A. bus system has not been comprehensively rethought in years and years. Doing so system-wide (not just on the South Shore) would bring efficiency and needed revenue to the M.B.T.A.

For the fourth point I am indebted to Andrew Card, the distinguished former state representative from Holbrook, now serving in the Reagan Administration. Card has proposed that pending the restoration of passenger rail service, unused rights of way be acquired, paved, and reserved for express bus service. This is a first-rate idea, for not only would it bring bus service directly into South Shore business districts, it would set aside and preserve invaluable rights-of-way against the day when funding is available to bring back rail service.

I would go one step futher. I would take the 1924 map of every then extant railroad trunk, division, branch and spur in Massachusetts, and set aside each and every one of these lines as a public right-of-way in perpetuity. Where rights-of-way have been legally abandoned and sold off, easement should be reacquired by eminent domain, and while property would not be taken from present owners, further building on these rights-of-way would be prohibited.

The long view is needed here. These rights-of-way were taken and laboriously constructed between 1840 and 1875. In the last 50 years many have been abandoned and sold off. But old-timers can still show you where they lie, and the fruit of the labor of their builders is still plain to see for those who know where to look.

If these rights-of-way are maintained and restored, our children's children will have the option of using them as roads, as railroads, as bike paths, as nature walks . . . or nothing. But if we do not set aside these precious rights-of-way, if we allow them to continue to dissolve into suburbia, our children's children's only effective choice will be the last option above: nothing.

Fifth, and finally, an idea of my own. The possibility of converting part of South Weymouth Naval Air Station into a small, limited-use commercial airport should be explored. This should be done, not in the hope of relieving congestion on Rte. 3, but for economic reasons.

One of the chief reasons good companies with good jobs are reluctant to locate in Southeastern Massachusetts is the lack of easy airport access. It simply takes too long for companies' personnel to get from Logan Airport to potential sites in Southeastern Massachusetts. Therefore they are inclined to locate elsewhere — near Hanscom Field, for example.

But if the opportunity existed to fly directly out of South Weymouth every day to places like LaGuardia and Newark, our economic attractiveness to new companies could suddenly increase in a major way. Plymouth Airport is an alternative should military or environmental concerns preclude such a plan at South Weymouth.

These are some of the things that, failing to secure the major funding necessary for significant rail and road improvements in the present decade, we can do to deal with our transportation problem. Next week, in the fifth and final part of this series, I will summarize my observations and recommendations.

MUSINGS — by John H. Cutler

☐The word druggist seems to have disappeared. Pharmacist displaced it.

☐Every year from October to January about 3,500 bald eagles cluster for a salmon feast on the banks of Alaska's Chilkat River. The eagles fly from as far away as Washington State to join the dinner party that is not held anywhere else in the world.

☐Secretary Evarts was a clever speaker. Rising at a Thanksgiving dinner, he said: "You have been giving your attention to a turkey stuffed with sage. You are now about to consider a sage stuffed with turkey."

☐Some folks are very intolerant when they try to defend tolerance.

☐I hate people who dislike people. Reminds me of a quip by W.C. Fields: "I am free of all prejudices. I hate everyone equally."

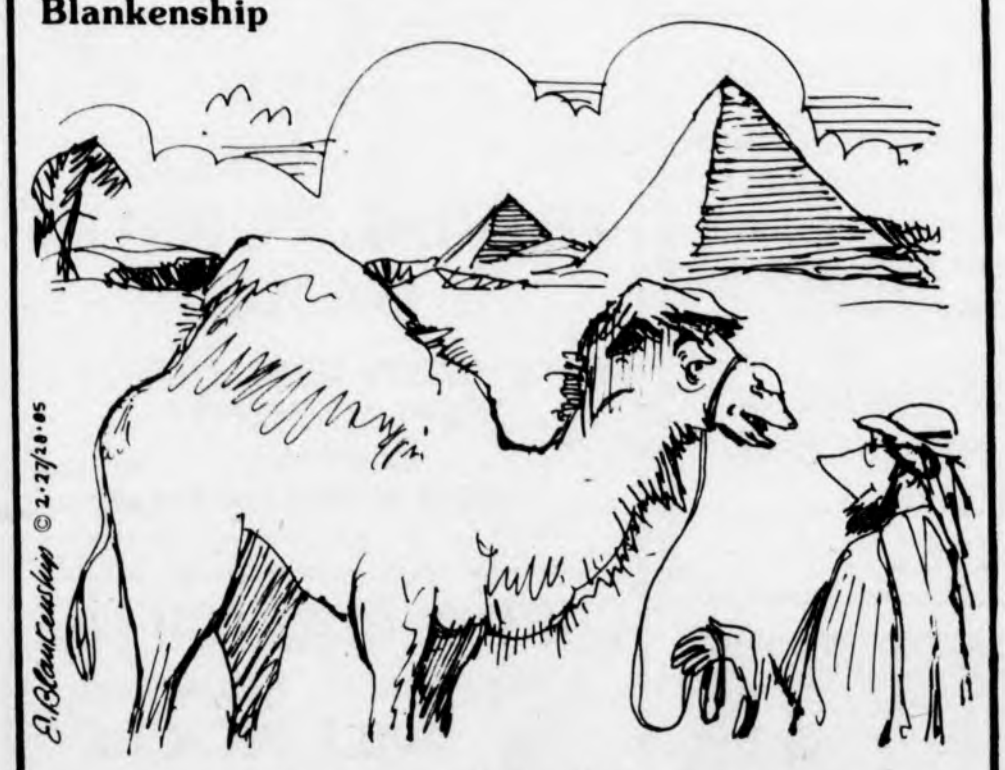
☐A nature note: An aardvark's tongue can be up to 18 inches long. Covered with sticky saliva, this tongue helps the aardvark lap up termites, ants and other insects.

☐Personal hatred for General Andrew Jackson was high during his White House term as President. One senator, who had lost a bout with the fiery Jackson, remarked bitterly: "I don't wish Jackson any harm, but I shouldn't care if the Almighty took a fancy to him."



☐Mosquitoes give flies a bad name.

☐Fred Friendly, former president of news at CBS and currently the Edward R. Morrow Professor Emeritus of Broadcast School of Journalism at Columbia University, said something surprising about the First Amendment of the Constitution: "Notice the wording of the First Amendment, 'Congress shall make no law.' It says nothing about state laws." Friendly said the Founding Fathers did not want the federal government to regulate the press, but they said nothing about the states regulating the press.

☐During the tour of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, one of my young sons said, "Don't start looking at things, Daddy, or we'll never get around."

NATIONAL FLOOD INSURANCE PROGRAM
Proposed Flood Elevation Determinations

AGENCY: Federal Emergency Management Agency

ACTION: Proposed rule.

SUMMARY:

Technical information or comments are solicited on the proposed base (100-year) flood elevations shown in your community's preliminary Flood Insurance Study and Flood Isurance Rate Map. These base (100-year) flood elevations are the basis for the flood plain management measures that the community is required to either adopt or show evidence of being already in effect in order to qualify or remain qualified for participation in the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP).

DATES:

The period for comment will be ninety (90) days following the second publication of this proposed rule in a newspaper of local circulation in the community.

ADDRESSES:

Study and maps showing the proposed base flood elevations and their delineation are available for review at the office of Christine Bassett, Chairman of the Planning Board, Town Hall, Cohasset, Massachusetts.

Send comments to:
Honorable Clifford Mitman
Chairman of the Board of Selectmen of the Town of Cohasset

Acting Chief, Risk Studies Division
Federal Insurance Administration
Federal Emergency Management Agency
Washington, DC 20472

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

The Federal Emergency Management Agency gives notice of the proposed determinations of base (100-year) flood elevations, in accordance with Section 110 of the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973 (Pub. L. 93-234), 87 Stat. 980, which added Section 1363 to the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 (Title XIII of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 (Pub. L. 90-448) 42 U.S.C. 4001-4128, and 44 CFR 67.4(a).

These elevations, together with the flood plain management measures required by Section 60.3 of the program regulations, are the minimum that are required. They should not be construed to mean the community must change any existing ordinances that are more stringent in their flood plain management requirements. The community may at any time enact stricter requirements on its own, or pursuant to policies established by other Federal, State, or regional entities. These proposed elevations will also be used to calculate the appropriate flood insurance premium rates for new buildings and the contents and for the second layer of insurance on existing buildings and their contents.

Pursuant to the provisions of 5 USC 605(b), the Administrator, to whom authority has been delegated by the Director, Federal Emergency Management Agency, hereby certifies that the proposed flood elevation determinations, if promulgated, will not have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities. A flood elevation determination under Section 1363 forms the basis for new local ordinances, which, if adopted by a local community, will govern future construction within the flood plain area. The elevation determinations, however, impose no restriction unless and until the local community voluntarily adopts flood plain ordinances in accord with these elevations. Even if ordinances are adopted in compliance with Federal standards, the elevations prescribe how high to build in the flood plain and do not proscribe development. Thus, this action only forms the basis for future local actions. It imposes no new requirement; of itself it has no economic impact.

Lessees and owners of real property in the Town of Cohasset, Norfolk County, Massachusetts, are encouraged to review the preliminary Flood Insurance Study and Flood Insurance Rate Map available at the address cited above. Proposed base flood elevations along flood sources studied in detail are:

Source of Flooding	Range of Base Flood Elevations #Depth in feet above ground. *Elevation in feet (NGVD)

Shallow Flooding	#2 - #1
The Gulf	*8 - *11

Commission grants permit

At a meeting held by the Sewer Commission last Monday night, Fred Koopman was granted a permit to install a cast iron pipe, replacing the clay pipe previously used as the sewer main at 19 Elm Street.

Koopman purchased the building with the intention of opening a small gift shop featuring potted plants, dried flowers, and crafts, contributed from residents of the south shore.

Charlie DeSantis, chairman of the commission, stated that no application was required. If the Building Inspector requests a signature from the sewer commission, then they will sign.

Dan Cotton, substituting for planning board member Christine Bassett, presented proposed by-law changes for public hearing March 6, 1985. After reviewing the changes, sewer commissioners felt that any changes that can limit costs would definitely be fiscally beneficial.

At the conclusion of their brief meeting Monday night, sewer commissioners stressed that they expect the chief operator to be present at all future meetings.

Chess Release

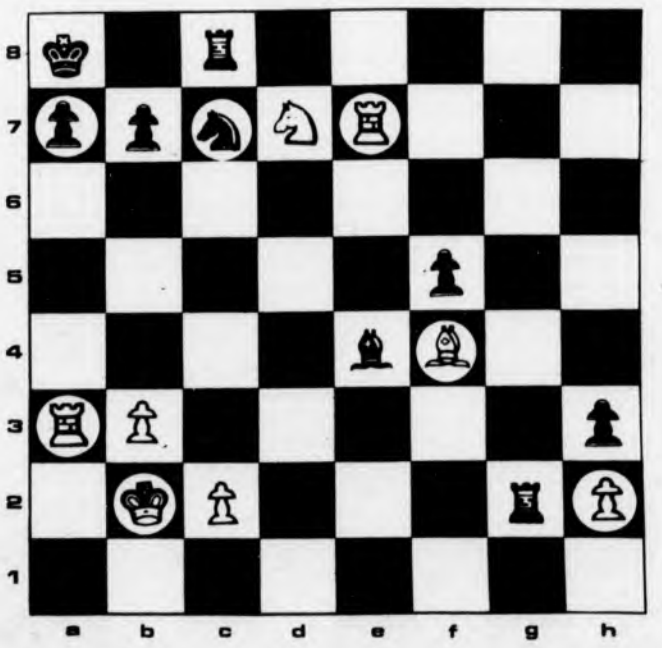
2/27/85

Just for starters

By Chris Bernstein

Last weeks release went in search of competition . This week the subject is for beginners.

There is a common belief that chess is an extremely complex game. This is not necessarily the case. In actuality the capabilities of the players determines how complex a game it will be.



For the beginner there is a checkered board with a bunch of strange and varied shaped pieces. The pieces become an immediate curiosity. Given a majestic quality, the King, Queen, Bishop, Knight, Rook, and Pawns, spring to life as soon as their differant mobility is learned.

The object is simple, capture your opponents King (Checkmate) and you win. To learn the basics or teach your children you need only to travel as far as your local library. Some children pick up the game more readily than their parents. At any age chess is a fine exercise for the mind.

process over the past seven years. To my knowledge, only one town has turned down such a plan. In a time of tax limitation and tax reduction, this cooperative technology clearly makes good management sense to a lot of observers.

4. It is not accurate to say that such proposals "are being reviewed in hundreds more towns throughout Massachusetts." There may be two or three similar projects currently in Massachusetts. What I said was that these systems have been joined by hundreds of libraries across the nation, and that the trend will continue.

5. It is not accurate to say that joining this system is "clearly a matter of survival for this library." Cohasset's support and use is too good to imagine the demise of the library. What I meant to convey is that labor costs will be better controlled, and services better maintained if we join a regional networking modern techniques.

6. Our card holders are not "several hundred" but several thousand - - 70 percent of the town's population. The "700 items processed daily", which are subject to automation, are just loans checked out and checked in. We added up all the paper-handling transactions that require typing, counting, filing and unfiling slips or cards, and it comes to more than 2,300 per day! The elimination of these manual counting and filing systems will free our staff to give more personal attention to people, and to absorb increased use of the library which will result if we join the Old Colony Library Network.

Richard Hayes,

Towns cupidity

To the Editor:

The "overwhelming support" from the 21 towns contacted by our Sewer Commission seems to boil down to one letter, from the town of Bourne, so you've presented one hundred percent of the evidence. Proves only that gullibility and cupidity is not entirely confined to Cohasset voters.

R.M. Campbell

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

17th century wedding links the present with the past

By Audrey Louison

When Mike Antoine and Carolyn Bacon decided to get married, they wanted their wedding to be different. When Judy Hardy became program director for Hingham's 350th Committee, the group organizing the town's 350th birthday celebration, she knew she wanted to create a meaningful link with the past.

Now the twain have met and on May 4, 1985, Carolyn and Mike will be married in a public ceremony recreating a 17th century colonial wedding.

Carolyn Bacon is, through her father Roger, a direct descendent of John and Priscilla Alden and also of an early Hingham's settler, Daniel Lincoln.

Her grandmother, whose diamond engagement ring now shimmers on Carolyn's right hand, attended Old Ship Church (where the wedding will take place) until her death last year.

Carolyn says that having her wedding serve as a tribute to Hingham's history is particularly meaningful for her and her family.

But in more practical terms, this wedding is taking a more exhaustive planning effort than most. The Bacons and the Antoines, along with a few recruited close friends, have organized a "planning committee" with each member given an area of responsibility. Every week or so, the group gets together to report on progress.

What is it that could possibly require such a dramatic effort? Well, before even the most routine wedding day plans could be made, the group had to do its homework to learn the social customs and mores of 17th century New England.

Fortunately, Carolyn's mother, Janice Bacon, is a bit of a history buff, so she spearheaded the research project that took her, Mike's sister Mary, and friends Laurie McKenzie and Laurie Peterson to Plimoth Plantation.

Every year, the model Pilgrim village stages a mock wedding re-creation and the researchers there very graciously shared their resources and advice with the Hingham group on everything from period attire to food and decor.

What they discovered in Plymouth has dispelled for the group some of what they call the "myth" generally believed about the inhabitants of colonial Massachusetts: that they were a group of somber-faced killjoys dressed in black.

"Not true," says Mary Antoine, and the families hope that through Carolyn's and Mike's wedding, that they can change the way people think of the early settlers.

"Contrary to what most people seem to think," says Janice Bacon, "folks back then wore very colorful and intricately-patterned clothing. Carolyn and her mother have chosen earthy, pastel colors for Carolyn's wedding dress, which will be a close replica of the sort of bulky, full-skirted, many-layered dress popular in those days.

Carolyn declines, however, to wear a "hip roll," which was a layer of bulky material worn underneath a dress to enhance a woman's hips and thus make her waist look relatively small. Carolyn calls it the "inverted tulip" look and, adamantly refuses to have anything to do with it, even for the sake of historical accuracy.

A total of 19 close relatives and friends will be dressed in colonial garb on the day of the wedding. Mrs. Bacon has the role of master seamstress, ably assisted by Carolyn.

Together they will painstakingly create patterns copied from prototypes given them at Plimoth Plantation. Being able to do the sewing will surely save on expenses but Mrs. Bacon can't help but let loose a sigh when she looks at the stray pieces of material piled on her now-hidden dining room table.

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

Trend indicates return to elegance

By Donna Desiata

What's new in weddings for 1985?

The trend in wedding flowers is a return to elegance.

Couples are more sophisticated, the fashions are frillier, flowers are more varied and details are more important than ever.

Never before have brides been so intent on creating a total image.

Fresh Flowers

While traditional all-white bridal bouquets will continue to be popular, more and more brides are asking for color and imported varieties.

This year's most wanted blossoms are roses, gerberas, freesias, white and pink rubrum lillies and alstroemerias.

As for bouquet styles, variations on the traditional loose cascades and colonials seem to be most popular with lots of lace backing, reflecting from Lady Diana's wedding.

More and more brides are opting for wearing crowns of fresh baby's breath rather than veils, or in adjunct to.

Brides should choose flowers which color coordinate their attire or theme and importantly, that are in season. Out of season flowers can usually be imported, but at a higher expense.

Fresh flowers traditionally symbolized fertility at a ceremony, but over the centuries have taken on special meanings, such as these commonly requested wedding flowers:

The white bridal rose signifies unity, red is love, and the yellow rose signifies friendship.

Carnations symbolize distinction, while stephanotis means happiness.

The orchid reveals beauty, and the gardenia is an expression of joy.

The lily signifies pride, and the iris represents wisdom.

Chrysanthemums symbolize friendship, and the daisy proves innocence.

The forget-me-not means true love and as most often requested in five out of six bridal bouquets, and the ivy reflects affection and wedded love.

Wearing of the Flowers

Etiquette says wearing of the flowers is best on the left hand side.

Bridal nosegays and bouquets should follow the lines of the gown or dress, and be held in a spot the bride feels most comfortable, preferably in the left hand.

Corsages should be pinned on the left shoulder, left side of a waisted belt, or worn on the left wrist.

The same rule applies for boutonnieres.

Arm, presentation bouquets, or roses should rest in the natural curve of the arm, all facing the same direction.

Expert Hints for Fresh Flowers

Keep in a cool spot, avoid direct sunlight.

Sprinkle cool water on them to freshen-up at the last minute.

Make sure your florist doesn't design your wedding flowers more than 24 hours ahead, so they are fresh and fragrant.

Check to see who delivers and sets up your wedding flowers - a delivery person or the designers themselves.

Silks

Silk weddings are vastly on the rise. They are a great, sentimental gift idea for the bridal party, relatives and friends that can later be redesigned for a reminiscent keepsake if so desired.

Silk flowers are full of texture and can be scented with any floral fragrance or perfume, either now or later. They look like real flowers and last forever.

They can be color-coordinated to you and your attendants perfectly, whereas fresh flowers may have to be dyed or painted.

Seasonal availability is no problem, making it easier to establish a budget any time of the year.

How about a matching silk "throw bouquet" so the catcher will have lasting memories of your wedding forever?

Let your florist suggest all the possibilities for a beautiful, romantic, fragrant and colorful wedding - fresh or silk.

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

Creating your ceremony special & unique

By Kathleen Kroll

Creating a ceremony as unique and special as your relationship takes only a little time and lots of loving attention.

If writing the ceremony from beginning to end appeals to you, there are books at various libraries with guidelines and sample services for you to follow.

The law requires little except two willing participants and a licensed officiant. So, if a bare-bones ceremony or one guaranteed to make family and friends glaze over is all you require, then there is no need to examine the words and meaning of the text used.

But if you would like a more memorable ceremony, there are ways you can achieve an intimate service whether you are being married by clergy or the local Justice of the Peace.

All you really need is a library card, a book or two of poetry and a couple of favorite love songs.

Sit down with a bottle of wine and an open mind and enjoy yourself. Get to know each other a little better as you discover what you'd really like to impart during the formalizing of your vows. No other union, no other marriage will be quite like yours. Take the time to make your wedding one-of-a-kind.

The era of "flower child" weddings has come and gone, leaving as its legacy a society more receptive to personalized ceremonies.

Some couples still opt for writing the entire text, but for most the added research and tension looms overwhelming. "We wanted to write our own ceremony," said one recent bride, "but it was just too much work and too much energy to put out when there was so much else to do."

As a happy compromise, most couples individualize their ceremonies with poems and readings that have special meaning to them alone. Poets E.E. Cummings, Elizabeth Barrett Browning and T.S. Eliot are often chosen.

"On Love" and "On Marriage" are two popular selections by poet Kahlil Gibran, but any reading in good taste can be used. Passages from the Bible, Shakespeare - even Nietsche - have been quoted extensively.

Songs thoughtfully selected and played during the processional and recessional can effectively set a mood and send a message of new beginnings and joy.

Two songs on the top of the list are "We've Only Just Begun" (The Carpenters), and "The Wedding Song" (Paul Stookey).

Other appropriate choices are: "Amazing Grace," "Sunrise, Sunset," "All You Need Is Love," "Turn Around," "Love Story Theme," and "Turn, Turn, Turn" (Adapted from Ecclesiastes, set to music by Pete Seeger). Even songs like "Bridge Over Troubled Waters" and "Both Sides Now" are poignant when the sentiment reflects the couple's feelings about one another.

Other areas of the traditional ceremony should be scrutinized before you accept the status quo as reflective of your own values. Is the bride really a possession to be "given away" from one man to another? Many who are offended by this sexist symbolism choose to have both parents escort the bride and omit the "handing over" aspect altogether. Or, both bride and groom can be "given away" by their respective parents.

There are many variations on every theme. It takes only a bit of thought and foresight to tailor traditions to your own needs.

"To love, honor and obey," "till death do us part," "as long as we both shall live."

If you find any or all of these phrases objectionable, you are not alone. Authorities cite these as the three most altered or omitted phrases in the traditional ceremony script. Check with your officiant ahead of time to ascertain that the wording of his or her standard ceremony is to your liking. If you prefer "husband and wife" to "man and wife," insist on it. If you'd rather vow, "as long as we both shall love," say so. You are not making trouble, you are making memories!

Little things, like the bride lifting her own veil at the end of the ceremony, signify a more equal union between husband and wife, and personalize the service further.

Even the attire chosen for the occasion can speak volumes. One couple made a dazzling sight on the alter of St. Thecla's Church in Pembroke when both bride and groom wore white. "He's proud that they are both still virgins," said the bride's mother. "Why shouldn't he wear white?"

The bottom line is this: the ceremony should make a statement to yourselves, family and friends about who you are and what your dreams are. It should bind you together with more than words and documents. It should bind you together with thoughtfulness and caring and shared goals. It should be a sharing between you and your guests. It should be yours alone.

Selecting special songs or writing a poem can take some time but it adds a whole new dimension to the vows too often taken for granted.

What better way to build a life together than to write the words that will make that possible.

And only you can do it, with meaning and feeling and love.

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

Religious ceremonies

By Judy Gilman

Every bride dreams of marching down the aisle of a large and imposing church as friends and relatives filling the pews beam on the happy scene.

But what happens if you're not a regular member of a church? Or because of a doctrinal position within your church (such as remarriage within the Roman Catholic Church) those facilities are closed to you? Do you have to make do with a non-religious ceremony?

The Rev. Earl Alger of Hingham believes very strongly that you do not, that there is a definite place for a spiritually based wedding among those who do not have a "regular" church.

And the longtime pastor of the Hingham Congregational Church feels so strongly about this that he is leaving his parish the end of June to start a business that will specialize in designing, marketing and conducting liturgies for couples celebrating "significant moments" in their lives together - not just marriages, but vow renewals, as well.

Please don't consider his company, Lovelight, on a par with the well-known wedding chapels in Las Vegas, because it will be far from that. But Alger sees a desire among couples to add a spiritual tone and feeling to a ceremony that might not otherwise be possible.

In his years at the Hingham Congregational Church, he has had his share of couples who wanted to be married in his church because they admired the architecture, or they heard he performed pleasing ceremonies, or they were being shut out of their own church's sacrament because of doctrinal positions.

While Alger doesn't argue with the last, saying that all organizations and groups have their rules, he does feel it important to start a life together with a spiritual tone. And, at the same time, he is very strongly in favor of vow renewal, celebrating anniversaries with what he calls "holy hilarity" to remind the couple of their commitment to each other. Alger admits he's a romantic at heart and feels strongly that many relationships wither away because the romance and specialness is lost. Vow renewals of the sort he envisions are a way to recapture that specialness and remind the couple why they embarked on their road together in the first place.

Like many other aspects of the activities surrounding the wedding, Alger counsels planning early on what sort of ceremony is wanted and appropriate (unlike many brides' instinctive move to hire the caterer or the reception area first and then have everything else fall into place). And he asks the couple to accept some practical counseling before the ceremony, not as formal as that required by some churches but rather some useful and usable advice to follow once the wedding gown has been packed away and the honeymoon is over.

Though Alger is leaving his parish ministry at the end of June, he believes strongly in ministry, in his beliefs and has chosen married folk as his new ministry. He feels that if couples have a pleasant and accommodating experience in having a religiously-oriented wedding ceremony, they may, at some point in the future, "relate to a local faith community," as he expressed it in a recent sermon to his congregation explaining his decision to leave. For the Harvard Divinity School graduate, this is yet another ministry he sees opening up, another call that needs to be answered. Lovelight can be reached at 749-0322.

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

A link from the present to...

One of the people Mrs. Bacon will be outfitting will be the family's minister, Earl Alger of Hingham Congregational Church. Reverend Alger will not be dressed as a colonial minister, however, because a 17th century marriage came under the jurisdiction of the civil authorities, and the ceremony was conducted by the local magistrate. Reverend Alger has agreed to dress the part, if not play it.

Here is where the Bacon-Antoine wedding will diverge somewhat from pure authenticity. The service, which will be written by Mrs. Bacon and Judy Hardy, will derive from both the actual civil marriage ceremony and prayers taken from the Anglican book of Common Prayer.

"We are going to take some liberties with history because the circumstances are indeed different," says Hardy, "but we will recapture a mood and make it a happy occasion."

Carolyn hastens to add that there will be another significant difference between her wedding and that of her colonial counterpart. A 17th century marriage was often arranged by the couple's parents with little regard for whether the bride and groom were in love. Carolyn and Mike want to assure people that they have chosen each other and they are in love. They will also exchange wedding rings, a ritual not practiced in the Bay Colony.

The festivities will commence at 1:30 p.m. at the Old Ship Church, built in 1681 as a meetinghouse. It is the oldest standing meetinghouse in New England and it is where a marriage ceremony would have taken place were this the 17th century. Just as then, the public is invited to witness this wedding. The bride and groom will arrive by horse and buggy. Carolyn will gather her bouquet as friends hand her sprigs of various herbs while she walks into the church. The bride and groom will walk in together; the bride was not, in those days, "given away" by her father. Herbs, deeply symbolic, were carried instead of cultivated flowers. Lavender, for instance, signified devotion, and rosemary, fidelity.

The inside of the meetinghouse was and will be likewise decorated with herbs and not flowers. Carolyn hopes to arrange for music played on a lute or recorder before and after the ceremony. After the wedding, well-wishers will throw wheat, not rice, as was the custom.

Another myth about early America is that the staid colonials ate only the blandest of foods. In fact, the wedding party has discovered that because the 17th century was the setting for a booming spice trade with India and Asia, colonists ate a variety of exotically spiced food. Jeannie Hirsch, a long-time family friend and, by lucky coincidence, a professional chef, has investigated the eating habits of the first Hingham natives.

"There was a definitely established order of priority given to the different categories of food," explains Hirsch. "Bread and meat were certainly considered the most important, while fish and vegetables had the lowest status. Consequently, Hirsch will prepare a wedding feast that will feature spicy meat pies and a variety of fresh breads, but little in the way of fish and vegetables.

Hirsch is using recipes culled from Shakespearean plays, in addition to others she has found at the Plimoth Plantation library. "Shakespeare actually wrote recipes into his plays, and since then, chefs have translated the bard's measurements into ones understandable to the modern cook."

The settlers were not teetotalers, either. According to Hirsch, their primary beverage was beer, and they even had a weak version for children to drink. (Sorry, kids. This potion will not be available at this wedding.)

A third misconception about colonial life is that they had no fun and frowned upon mirth and frivolity. Again, the committee has found evidence to dispute that notion as well.

"After a wedding, there would be a public reception and everyone would play games like tug-of-war and egg carrying, for instance," says Mary Antoine. There was always plenty of dancing, but it was line dancing and girls would dance with girls and boys with boys. "One never danced with the opposite sex," says Mary.

Mary's research has unearthed other 17th century wedding customs, but her stories soon become more concerned with the wedding night. Maidens, says Mary, would join the newlyweds in the bridal chamber and perhaps play tricks like sewing the bride into the sheets. Or, they might sit on the end of the bed and throw the bride's discarded stocking over their shoulder.

If the stocking landed on the groom's head, it was believed that the maiden would soon marry. If a boy threw the stocking, though, and it landed in the sack-posset, a bridal drink similar to egg-nog, that was the signal that all should leave and let the couple be alone.

There will be a public reception outside Old Ship after Carolyn and Mike are married. Plans are not yet solidified, but according to Judy Hardy, there will most likely be games and music and dancing, with some traditional wedding bread and punch served. A private reception for family and friends will be held later that evening.

"This is really a family affair," says Janice Bacon, summing up the feeling of the group. "We are all doing this together and believe me, it takes some crazy people to get involved in a thing like this. It's really amazing."

Judy Hardy and the 350th Committee are equally anxious and excited. "This is a very happy example of how we can blend the past with the present in a meaningful way because it's not play-acting, but truly a joyous occasion."

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

Fashion & etiquette for 1985

By Jane Tamburri Spitz

From the moment a couple announces their engagement, they are eager to plan the perfect wedding. Concerns about fashion and etiquette affect decisions the bride- and groom-to-be will make in establishing their unique wedding style.

For couples entering into second marriages, these concerns are somewhat different and sometimes more numerous than those surrounding a first-time marriage.

Changing mores have made old etiquette books that list absolute do's and don'ts nearly obsolete. While the feelings of family members and making guests comfortable are always pertinent concerns, the couple must first decide what is important to them.

Planning the ceremony, making a guest list, chosing attendants - which often include children from a previous marriage - and sorting reception details determine the style of the wedding.

When it comes to what the bride will wear, there are many available options. However, the choice belongs to the bride.

"Many encore brides feel uncomfortable wearing white and find ivory or pastels in either floor or mid-calf lengths more tasteful," said Gloria Gilman of Gloria's Bridal Shop in Weymouth.

Generally, second-time brides are staying away from stark white, heavy lace and bead work. They're wearing formal dresses with pillbox, small brim picture hats or simple headdresses like wreaths of flowers, she explained.

Gilman claims that "the fad is whatever looks best on you." She emphasizes that encore brides know what they want by the time they begin shopping.

"Second-time brides tend to be a bit older - anywhere from late twenties or early thirties and up. They have independent minds and therefore wear what they feel most comfortable in," said Betsy Kidder, the advertising director of Priscilla of Boston.

Priscilla, like most manufacturers, offers a line designed especially for second-time brides. The Contemporary Romantic Collection consists of floor, afternoon and tea-length dresses that are simple and enchanting. Lace work, pearl trimming, pleating, and dotted or embroidered net create a distinctive bridal look. Many lacey dresses for the less-than-traditional wedding are accented by colored slips and are particularly suitable for other occasions as well.

"The second-time bride tends to be more practical in her choices. But we've found that once she wears her wedding dress it takes on a different meaning and sentimentality won't allow her to wear it again," said Kidder.

"More people are getting married again. Though older couples usually have smaller, less formal affairs, there is no protocol for a second wedding," according to Kathy Lindquist, owner of Everlasting Dreams Bridal and Groom Shop in Marshfield.

Booking your wedding with your Florist:

Make sure you book your wedding date with your florist far in advance. Many dates are booked months prior to the wedding. Most florists take only so many weddings on any given weekend. A small deposit, usually refundable, will hold that date until you are ready to sit down with your florist and make final arrangements. Final arrangements are usually made a month before your wedding day.

of being a bride, whether it's a first marriage or a subsequent one, is echoed by many wedding consultants.

"Though the majority of second-time brides are afraid of offending their guests, we encourage them to base their decisions on what they want. A lacey, romantic and traditional look is very popular. Even small veils or wreaths are used, but they are skipping the full-train," said Lea Ciardelli of Priscilla's at the South Shore Plaza.

For those couples where only one has been married previously or for whom the first wedding was less traditional, the desire to go all out may prevail. Compromises, such as an intimate ceremony followed by a large, gala reception, allows for lavish yet tasteful planning.

Fashions for the bride and groom have expanded and become more flexible over the past five or six years. Veils that are easily detached after the ceremony, nuances in the treatment of fabrics that provide a tint of color or a less formal taffeta, organza or American silk dress give the growing number of second-time brides the opportunity to be selective.

Black, double-breasted tuxedos accented by a dash of color, a red or pink bow tie and cummerbund, or a less traditional suit with a pastel shirt and complementary colored boutonniere allow the groom to choose clothing that reflects his personal taste.

While one couple perfers traditional formalwear, bridesmaids and a religious ceremony, another may choose a less formal contemporary look for a civil ceremony attended by a few close friends and relatives.

Ultimately, deciding what's right for a wedding, rests with the bride and groom.

How to find the dance band you like

Entertainment for your wedding reception is among one of the most important elements necessary. Here is an outline of ideas that may aid you in finding a dance band to make your day successful.

1.) Try to contact at least two or three different bands, so you have some basis for comparison. (Unless, of course, you've already heard the perfect band.) Remember, you want to feel good about the group you've chosen.

2.) Look for a band that can play all styles; from Benny Goodman to Michael Jackson. Most older folks like to rock out to at least one dance a night, and there's always a good, young jitterbug or lindy dancing couple in every disco-rock contest. The band should be able to please all crowds.

3.) If there is going to be a predominance of one ethnic group, Irish, Italian, Polish, Jewish, you will want musicians who can play songs from these nationalities.

4.) When you first contact the band, ask for a songlist to see what they know.

5.) Find a band that will learn your special song. There are usually one or two that may have very special meaning to the bride and the groom.

6.) You will usually have to hear a function band at someone else's party. Most function bands only play lounge or club circuits occasionally. If this is the situation, then follow these suggestions; first, go to the hall in proper attire, i.e. suit and tie for the man, and dress for the woman; second, stand discretely in the rear doorway, since you are an uninvited guest.

7.) Book the band as far in advance as you can make your decision. Steady bands, like a function hall, are often contracted six months to a year before the date.

8.) Expect to put a deposit on the band, and sign a contract with the band leader or agent.

9.) A band should ask you to fill out a "format schedule" for your wedding. This is important, since not all weddings are traditional. The form should list your options for introductions, blessing, toast, dances, cake cutting, garter, bouquet, etc.

10.) Touch base with your band one to two weeks before the function date to make sure they understand what you want to happen on your day, and whether any changes from their format schedule have been made.

11.) Alternative type functions may not feature a dance band. Background jazz or classical music make a wedding very unique.

12.) Expect to travel, perhaps to Boston, or even the distant galaxy known as the North Shore, to hear a band. Most successful function groups are in demand all over the Boston area, and not just in one locale.

13.) If your band is part of a "package deal," ask to listen to them. You have a right to know what you're paying for.

14.) When your date finally arrives, dance, and enjoy your spouse, relatives and friends.

(Vincent Mitchell Quintet, Braintree, Mass., 617-843-3200)

Wedding Flowers hints

Silk flowers bouquets can enhance any wedding. The choice of colors is so much greater in silk flowers & the price is competitive with fresh flowers.

Bouquets become a wonderful sentimental remembrance for the bride and her attendants. After the wedding, the nosegay piece can be placed in a basket and used as an arrangement in any room of the house. Brides sometimes give the bouquets to their attendants with a basket or brass bowl so that the bouquet is a gift to the bridesmaid and helps to reduce costs for the bride's family. Brides and their attendants often choose to make bouquets themselves, to add a very personal touch to a wedding. At Garden Craft of Assinippi, we give expert help with flower style and color choice for a pleasing overall effect.

When choosing colors we suggest that a range of hues be chosen, since if all flowers and ribbons match exactly, the flowers will blend into the dress. For example: for a pale pink dress, it would be much better to use light pink and rose and white flowers, or even add lavender flowers or violets for an old fashioned, romantic look.

We at Garden Craft have often been called the "Idea People". We have created straw bonnets and bouquets for a Great Gastsby look in Newport, and huge bowls for centerpieces for a Christmas wedding so that the tables appeared to be a Christmas packages.

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

Choosing that special gown just for you

By Gloria Gilman

Selecting your wedding gown is one of the most important personal choices you will make in your wedding planning. You don't want to look just pretty on your wedding day, but gorgeous and memorable in the eyes of your groom. Of course you want your attendants to look smashing too, to compliment the lovely picture. But not every style fits every shape, nor are all fabrics appropriate for various seasons.

If you begin your gown shopping with a few hints in mind, you'll be better prepared to buy the gown that will make you happy and your goom ecstatic.

Begin by looking though bridal magazines for fashion ideas on styles and fabrics. Try to narrow down your favorites to suit your figure and height. The fabric of your wedding gown, will depend on the season you have picked for your wedding.

Winter brides can choose from heavy fabrics such as satin or a brocade. Brocade is interwoven with a raised design which is beautiful for a candlelight ceremony. Moire is a silk taffeta which is also enhanced by lights and appears to glisten like water.

Spring and summer are the seasons for airy, open weave fabrics like eyelet, organza — which is sheer, crisp and almost transparent and voile, a soft cotton which could create a country-look or an informal mood. Early spring, late summer, and early fall are flexible months for fabric choices.

Make an appointment at a bridal shop that has a large selection and provides special attention for that very important day in your life. An appointment is usually recommended for individual attention, and we also suggest that a member of your family or a close friend accompany you at this time.

Go prepared by wearing suitable undergarments, including panty hose, strapless bra and comfortable pumps. These accessories, which can be purchased at the bridal shop, will enhance the finished product.

Enter the bridal shop with an open mind. Pictures are very helpful, so bring your favorites and show them to your salesperson. Don't be disappointed if the gown pictured isn't suitable for you. Some styles look better than others. For the petite girl, we suggest a V neck, high waist and a simple skirt. For the more mature figure, an open neck, flowing fabric, A-line, and a high waist looks best. The average to slim bride looks well in most designs.

Budget plays an important role when selecting your wedding gown. Be sure to mention your price range to your Bridal Consultant. If she's experienced, she will show you a large selection you can choose from without going overboard. Remember reembroidered laces such as Alencon, Schifflei Belgium, and Lyon, just to name a few are costly. Cotton based laces such as Chantilly, some Venise and Cluney are more affordable. Fabrics vary in quality but an inexpensive chiffon will still make you the beautiful bride you've always dreamed of being.

Once you have selected your bridal gown, it's time to browse around for your bridesmaid dresses. Take your maid of honor with you to try on different styles. Keep in mind the figures of your bridesmaids and the theme and tone you are trying to express. You do not have to march your bridal gown sleeve for sleeve, neckline for neckline, but keep in mind that an attendant's dress should compliment you and your gown.

Today's bride is favoring taffeta and chiffon for her bridesmaids. These are versatile fabrics which can be styled from Victorian and old-fashioned to sophisticated and elegant. This is not to say that satins, linens, voiles and other fabrics are not popular. Fabrics come in trends like everything else. Heavier fabrics are strictly for the fall/winter bride while crisp, transparent materials are appropriate for spring and summer.

When shopping for bridesmaids gowns, narrow down your choices to your favorites. You can even try on some styles to get the feel of what you'd like your girls to wear. When you've chosen the attendants gown, make sure you give your bridesmaids the opportunity to be open with you about affording the honor of buying and wearing it. If there is a question, a happy guest is better than an unhappy attendant. It can be quite expensive, especially if an attendant is married with a family. Avoid hard feelings by giving them the option. They will be honored that you considered them in the first place.

We've also tried to resolve the problem of fitting pregnant bridesmaids. If a maid is pregnant for the wedding our expert seamstresses work with us to try to determine how many sizes larger to order and also how we are going to alter the gown. Sometimes the gown cannot be altered to fit an eight-month pregnant attendant, and we are completely open and honest.

On the other side of the coin, Sandy has just given birth to a bouncing, baby girl. She's happy as a clam, but may not be back to that 25-inch waist. We foresee this situation so our recommendation would be to order her dress one or two sizes larger than her normal size.

These fashions were modeled by Joy Gilman Buckley.

Finally brides, don't forget your mother. We need as much time to order their gowns as we do for the bridesmaids, so take them shopping. There is so much to choose from today from the very informal but elegant and simple, to a more ornate look with beading. Coordinate the color to your bridal party but remember, select a color that is soft and flattering.

Let's not forget the mother of the groom. Be sure to keep her informed about what you've selected. Her gown should compliment your mother's.

Make an appointment with the bridal shop you have selected to have your in-town attendants fitted. Out-of-town bridesmaids should send their measurements to the bridal shop. Our shop requires bust, waist, and hips measurements and dress size, weight and height. If there is a girl with a similar figure in the party, we request that she try our sample gown on as a guideline to help us determine a more accurate size.

Remember to allow six months for ordering bridal gowns and 16 weeks for attendants dresses. Dress-makers are only human, and occasionally we receive a gown that is the wrong size or color lot. If you leave yourself and your bridal shop plenty of time, mistakes can be corrected.

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

When to wed? Is it a superstition?

God did not make woman from man's head, that she should rule over him; nor from his feet, that she should be his slave; but from his side, that she should be near his heart.

Talmud Proverb

By Jane Lane

Times have changed since Adam and Eve tied the knot. It was simply a case of borrowing a rib or two, and poof . . . instantaneous monogamous cohabitation.

Now brides and grooms have so many details to work out, so many customs to follow and omens to avoid.

More superstitions pertain to marriage than any of life's occasions. When to wed, what time, what day, what to wear and whether to marry, have all been chronicled in some form of tradition, custom or superstition.

We have all heard the rhyme in which the months of the year are described as favorable or disastrous for the pending nuptial. If married in January, "you'll be widowed before your prime ", in February, "life you'll tread in time together," and in March, "your home will lie on distant shore."

In fact, April remains the most popular month for weddings. Historians have it documented, noting that because Lent is a prohibited time, combined with the "unlucky" characteristics of a May wedding, April arrives at the most opportune time. If wed in June, "life will be one long honeymoon." Naturally, that month also fares quite well. December and January are next in line, coming right before the Lenten season.

Choosing the correct wedding date might also depend on where you are residing at the time. In Scotland, May 3 is especially unlucky, although doing anything on January 1 is positively free from disaster. In Ireland, the last day of the old year is blissfully lucky. And from a 1678 almanac,the following warnings were issued about pending proposals: "Marriage comes in on the 13th day of January , and at Septuagesima Sunday it is out again until Low Sunday, at which time it comes in again, and goes not out until Rogation Sunday; from whence it is unforbidden till Advent Sunday,but then it goes out,and comes not in again till the 13th January next following." Unfortunately, remaining married is not much simpler.

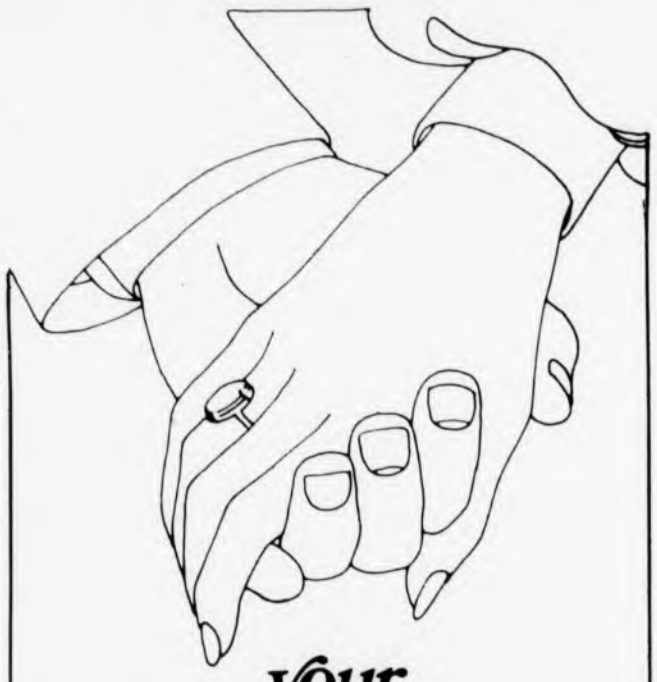
The following superstitions have been around about as long as the institution of marriage. It is most lucky for the bride to be married on her groom's birthday; a bridegroom's luckiest day is the day of the week on which he was born. Now, if you can hit both of these, apparently the possibility of divorce, bankruptcy, murder or famine is not in the cards.

A woman should not marry on the day of the week of her birth; to see a flight of birds as you go to church on your wedding day foretells many children; to meet a funeral is fair warning of a quick separation; if the sun emerges suddenly from behind a cloud and shines on the altar as the wedding is taking place, it is an omen for prosperity; "Happy the wooing that is not long a-doing"; bad news for the bride if she does not weep profusely on her wedding day; and on the other hand, great joy outlined on the face of the bride bodes great misfortune for the future; a groom should not view his bride on the day of the wedding before they meet at church; and she should never try on her wedding attire for him to view, or the marriage is doomed.

And one additional word of advice for all perspective brides, it's unlucky to have those towels or sheets embroidered with initials until the ring is on the finger.

As for the actual wedding day, it is unlucky for the bride to break anything on the morning of her wedding, a sure signal of unharmonious relations with the in-laws; if there is a cat in the house, the bride must feed it herself to ensure a day free from rain; and twins must never be married in the same church.

Blue and white only may be worn at the altar, one signifying truth and the other, purity. It is unlucky to have a wedding dress altered in any manner.



Each country and religion has its own particular traditions and customs surrounding marriage. Though many now seem outdated, such as the ominous omen for a woman to pass a pig on the way to her wedding, the institution will likely continue despite them. And more modern customs and superstitions will flourish as well..

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

Give attention to the music at the ceremony

Most couples planning a wedding put a great deal of thought into deciding what music will be featured at their wedding reception, but often give little consideration to the music heard at the ceremony.

The old standards — the familiar wedding marches by Mendelssohn, Wagner and Purcell — are usually taken for granted and played as a matter of unquestioned routine.

But Hingham's Judy Hardy is determined to inspire a rebellion against those "tired old pieces which should be put out to pasture." An experienced music arranger and now a wedding music consultant, Hardy wants couples to know that their choice of wedding music need be limited not by tradition, but only by desire, imagination and, of course, money.

"Since no bride would be caught wearing the same wedding dress as every other bride, why don't they mind having the same wedding music as everyone else?" asks Hardy with amazement. "A wedding is a very personal statement which doesn't begin with the reception; the wedding music can and should be just as tailored and personalized as the rest of the occasion."

"When couples and their families have put so much time and thought and resources into preparing a wedding, it's a shame if the memories don't include the music heard during the actual wedding." Hardy believes that the old wedding tunes have become almost generic and thus leave no impression on the families or the guests when heard yet again. "You wouldn't like to think that your guests won't be able to describe the ceremony after it's over, would you?"

Hardy argues that appropriate songs and orchestration for the ceremony can be chosen to complement the wedding dress, the wedding colors, the couple's personality and the wedding's size, formality and time of day.

"These are all ingredients that need to be taken into consideration when planning wedding music. A small, quiet wedding, for instance, might be accompanied by a harp and flute or a string quartet rather than brassier instrumentation." Hardy says that she tends to avoid including the ubiquitous organ in her wedding arrangements unless the couple is particularly fond of the instrument. She generally finds the organ adds nothing interesting to the music. But she warns, too, that the more complicated the orchestration, the higher the cost for musicians and rehearsals.

Hardy meets with her clients in the casual atmosphere of her kitchen. She asks them about their wedding plans and their favorite composers. Together they listen to several tapes to get an idea of the type of orchestration they most enjoy and that best suits the wedding. "I can get a good idea of what they want by just watching them," says Hardy. "When their eyes light up, I know we're on to something and we go from there.' She points out that in the not-too-distant past, it was the bride and her mother who would come over, but nowadays it is the bride and groom who share in making the decisions about their wedding.

"The sky's the limit," Hardy informs the betrotheds, but she stresses one unequivocal exception. She will not get involved in arranging pop music for a wedding. "I tell them that for the 20 minutes or an hour that they are getting married, the atmosphere should be totally detached from their regular world. The service is and the music should be."

But Hardy does not completely dismiss the possibility of using the old favorites either. Richard Wagner's "Lohemgrin," more commonly known as "Here Comes the Bride", is quite wonderful, says Hardy, when performed by a woman's choir singing its original German lyrics. And she says that properly arranged, Mendelssohn's "Recessional", acutally a piece from his "Midsummer's Night Dream" symphony, can achieve what she calls "dramatic superiority."

In addition to her consulting business, Judy Hardy's list of musical credits is extensive. Currently, she is chairman of the Hingham Arts Council, director of Arts and Culture for Hingham's cable TV and a teacher and music arranger at the South Shore Conservatory. Hardy has arranged theatrical and ballet scores and is the author of several music anthologies.

Wedding Bells Are Ringing

Invitations reflect the bride and groom

It officially sets the tone for the event. It is chosen, sent, received.

The almighty invitations. There are hours behind the choices and the options and varieties. The type, paper, ink can be confounding to those who believe they must follow a pat format.

That is probably one of the positive aspects of weddings today. There is great latitude for men and women to incorporate both tradition and originality in their weddings, starting with the invitation and finishing it off with the honeymoon spot.

Most of all, says Nancy Wilson, manager of the Mariner Print Shop, the invitations ought to reflect the bride and bridegroom while providing necessary information to the recipient.

Favorites for brides and bridegrooms in invitations are traditional in majority, the ivory paper with black ink in the delicate Venetian type.

But not for a moment should one believe that's all that's happening in invitations.Some couples write their own script, simply inserting different prose with the necessary and polite information. For one thing, said Wilson, people need to know what kind of a wedding and reception it will be, what dress will be appropriate.

It used to be that invitations went out two to three weeks before the event. Not now. More and more couples plan catered buffet or sit down dinners for dozens of people at the reception. People providing those services need a count well in advance so invitations are often mailed five to six weeks before the wedding.

It is also commonplace for respond cards to be included. That insures the RSVP that's needed. It's also an added expense. But low profile weddings are not for the usual bride and bridegroom. They often choose uptown accouterments, from invitations to flower arrangements.

The most common reminder Nancy Wilson and Joyce Hallisey (her co-worker) give customers is that they do not need to have an equal number of invitations and envelopes, because many invitees are married.

When they like a different color ink, brown and blue surface as favorites. The invitations are available in styles as contemporary as the couple choosing them, in bold types and modern design, choices, simply choices.

And the more options, as one would know, the more the cost. But, say, the couple wants 50 invitations and includes the personalized napkins and matches for table settings at the reception, an expected price of $150, she says, ought to do it.

These days, 125 guests at a wedding seem to be the choice. In the five years she's been with the print shop, she has done about three invitations that promise a church hall wedding reception. Most are held in clubs or restaurants, with full meals, bands and bars.

"People are more relaxed now, more comfortable, in choosing invitations," says Nancy Wilson. "Those who are intimidated assume there's a set format." There are guidelines but not dictums.

Most of all, the couple choosing is in charge of their choices. Neither tradition nor society should make those for them in personal taste and style. There is opportunity for individuality in invitations. And it can be naturally incorporated with the important etiquette intact.

In fact, there is nary a situation, no matter how trying, that is not possible to announce in a manner inoffensive.

Marriages can be announced after the fact. Celebration dates can be created at a time suitable to those for whom they are held.

And the choices are nearly infinite. In most cases they're fun, as flamboyant as one chooses to be or as formal or as fancy.

At the least, the invitation is the kick-off to a splendid event, the beginning of one of life's most important events.

When looking for rings, there are a few simple rules to follow. First of all, visit a reputable jeweler, don't be afraid to ask questions and shop as a couple. Make sure your rings are 14K gold. Your wedding rings are a financial investment, to be sure, but an emotional one as well. Take your time and visit several jewelers comparing price and quality.

Invitations

It is vitally important to allow enough time for the ordering, addressing and mailing of your invitations.

Ten weeks before your wedding you should order the invitations. They usually take four weeks to be processed. Give yourself two weeks for addressing, and mail them four weeks prior to the wedding.

Your invitations say a great deal about your wedding. Give yourself the necessary time to order exactly what you need.

Basketball fever strikes CHS!

Fans flock to games

By Mike Berger

Noted film reviewers Gene Siskel and Roger Ebert don't usually rave about movie sequels. They didn't really go thumbs up for Jaws II, Friday the 13th Parts II and III and didn't praise Return of the Jedi as much as the original Star Wars.

But for "Eddie and the Cruisers" - Cohasset style, they would be crazy not to rate this team a solid ten.

They've returned, those fun loving, hard working, small but extremely quick and intelligent basketball players.

A.K.A. (also known as) "The L.A. Express," the Smurfs and the Super Six, the Cruisers have come back from that bitter championship overtime loss to Cardinal Spellman with a vengeance.

Twenty-one straight games have come and gone and not one "L" has appeared in the loss column. In two years worth of competition, their combined record is 42-3.

Saturday, the ticket takers were sending 300 to 400 people away from the high school. Coach Eddie Minelli suggested to Athletic Director Clark Chatterton that they hook up a television monitor in the cafeteria so the fans could watch the game live instead of going home.

If the Cruisers win Thursday night against Medfield, the finals will be held Saturday night, prime time at 7 p.m. at Brockton High. And that preempts the Division I championship which is moved back to the afternoon because the tournament directors feel a potential Cohasset-Holbrook draw will pack in the fans.

But it wasn't always this Doug Flutie type hoop-

(turn to page 15)

It's their time

If the Cohasset High School girls varsity basketball team takes the division championship this week, no one will be happier than their coach, Bill Fallon. And no one will be less surprised.

According to their coach, "these girls deserve it. They've worked three years for this." The five starting members of the varsity squad began together as freshmen and have worked as a unit through spring and summer leagues. For these girls, Fallon explains, basketball is a year-long activity, not something to occupy their winters. They practice together in the the gym and out, with or without supervision. They have blended into a team that anticipates each other's moves, predicts each teammate's strategy.

Coping with life in Ethiopia

The following article includes excerpts from letters written by Cohasset resident Eileen Mullaney to her family. Eileen is currently working as a nurse in Ethiopia for Church World Services. She left Cohasset in early January, and has since written two letters. Ed.

January 15, 1985

Howdy. Today was actually my first day of work. Can you believe it! Seems like it has taken forever to get ourselves in gear. Setting up camp was basically simple but will take a few weeks to become smooth. I spent the morning training one of the ladies to wash our clothes and cook lunch, plus she'll keep things tidy. An important asset when you have nine and ten hour days. Church World Service are not experts in sending people to the mountains when it comes to camping gear. Our tents are more like weekend tents for occasional camping. Hopefully they'll send some sturdy ones before the Monsoon rains come, which I pray do arrive!

The biggest problem are the hyenas. We have a 24-hour guard with a gun to protect us from such raids. I foresee little problem. I just hope the girls relax more because worrying does little good. These people have lived for thousands of years and have dealt with all the elements (surviving).

Dutch men (tent experts) have volunteered for one month to travel through Ethiopia helping to set up Army tents. We put ours up a few days ago, 120 feet by 25 wide, with the help of the townspeople and Paulie, an Irish fellow who works at the next camp down the road (ten miles). Everyone has been extremely helpful. The two Dutch men have given me instructions today regarding the tents and reinforcing the large supply tent. It works perfect which serves as our kitchen and storage. I planned the latrine last week and we built it last night but delayed setting it up since the wood needs to be treated (many termites). The ground is extremely rocky and difficult to dig. Tomorrow will be the third day digging a latrine. To get two meters is back breaking.

There are three big camps in this area, our (Jewha) run by the Americans, next is Senbetti the largest run by 11 Dutch nurses, and the next camp is Karakeli, mastered by the Irish team (five). Each camp or feeding center serves 1000 people per day—cook food and feed needy children (intensive four feedings a day), give out weekly dry rations, and may cater to the sick if medicine is available. There are seven million people who are starving in Ethiopia. The other day we toured through the largest feeding center Senbetti, I can't describe to you what I felt half way through it. If left to sit in the car just to get myself together and face the horror. The first cry is always a shock and then I'm okay and can handle the misery. My work is cut out for me. But I can see we can do an immense amount because we basically have the support of the Ethiopians, plenty of firewood, not enough food and Future growth reviewed

If, as Planning Board Chairman Chris Bassett states, Cohasset is on the threshold of a housing boom, the question must follow. Where will these homes be located?

And, as Bassett told an audience attending the League of Women Voters (LWV) meeting last week, the more people residing in town, the greater the attraction for buisnesses to locate here. One depends on the other. Therefore, a second question arises. How and where will Cohasset accommodate businesses in the future?

The local LWV chapter presented a discussion of planning, past, present and future. The first portion of the program included a slide show produced in 1971 by the League, entitled, "Cohasset Choice or Chance?" As predicted in the slide presentation, the projected population of Cohasset in 1990 will be between 10-13,000. Together with the increased population will be the need for more schools and utilities. Will the harbor area be developed, and will there be increased need for multi-unit dwellings, were some questions raised in the presentation.

As Bassett explained, "The South Shore is the one undeveloped area of Greater Boston. Also, we are now seeing corporate service industries moving to the South Shore now and individuals want to live close to where they work. This makes Cohasset more attractive than ever."

A warning from the planning board chairman, "We are not an isolated hamlet any longer. A good engineer can work around the natural physical flaws in our community. In the past, this has been an impediment to growth, but not in the future."

In an effort to confront this present situation, the planning board has profiled the past five years of development in town. The end result, Bassett said, was a shock to the members. In the past five years there have been 118 new homes constructed. The size of the lots, however, do not conform to the size allowed in the particular districts. In district A where the lot sizes are required to be at least 12,000 square feet, the average lot size built in the past five years was 24,000 square feet. In district B where the Cohasset's week . . .

Commuter Rail update

State Sen. Bill Golden thus far had a victorious week as he heard a verbal commitment from the governor concerning South Shore commuter rail and received support from selectmen in Marshfield, Scituate and Cohasset to place several non-binding questions on the next town election ballot.

Golden said he did not want to vote for money for commuter rail six or seven years from now and then realize that only eight commuters from Scituate and Cohasset are riding the trains.

He wants to know if the general electorate wants the area commuter rail lines restored; if the residents themselves will use the trains; if each community will pay some portion of the cost and in Cohasset's case, should the commuter rail line stop at the Hingham shipyard?

Golden, speaking to area selectmen, agreed commuter rail is only one step of the solution to traffic congestion. Other alternatives as mentioned by assistant state Transportation Head Allan McKinnon are state subsidies to commuter boats and public buses, widening the third Harbor Tunnel through Boston and depresssion of the Central Artery.

If commuter rail comes to Scituate and Cohasset, the main question will be the environmental impact and land easement questions.

School budget review

At the advisory committee meeting held Tuesday night, the majority of the members recommended that the proposed school budget contain a four percent increase over last year's total. That amount would have to include teachers' salaries.

Although some advisors recommended a three percent increase, school administrators had proposed a five percent raise. Advisory committee chairman Jacqueline Dormitzer suggested a compromise of four percent be reached. The majority of the committee agreed with the compromise increase.

There were suggestions made as to how the school committee should reduce the proposed $4.2 million, including decreasing the fuel account. The advisors expressed concern that the gym was opened every night, and the heat was being unnecessarily generated throughout the building.

In other action Tuesday night, the committee voted to approve a transfer request from the Fire Department for an additional Acting Captain's position. The current Acting Captain is out on disability leave and another firefighter is scheduled to be named to that position. The committee approved a $620 budget transfer to cover the costs of an additional captain's position.

Fire chief wants truck

Despite rejection by the selectmen last week, Fire Chief Martin Dooley said he would still like voters to decide whether to purchase a $125,000 fire engine.

In an attempt to pare down the number of warrant articles, selectmen last week ousted the appropriation request. Since that time, Chief Dooley has been gathering costs to rehabilitate the 12 year-old engine, and figures to lease/purchase a vehicle. Chief Dooley said the lease/purchase agreement could cost the town about $30,000 a year.

Engine four is used at all fire calls and is the vehicle which stores the main apparatus used at any fire or emergency calls. It was custom-made and delivered to the department 12 years ago. Since that time, it has been out of service many times for expensive repairs, and the chassis of the truck is rotting, according to the fire chief.

Census forms returned

Town Clerk Frances Marks has requested that all census forms be immediately returned to her office.

She said that more than 2000 of the 3100 forms mailed have thus far be returned. Although a voter may be taken off the voter list if they fail to return the forms, returning the census form does not register a voter.

Town Clerk office hours are from 8:30 a.m. 4:30 a.m. Monday through Thursday and 8:30 a.m. and 1 p.m. Friday.

Letters from Ethiopia water, but some at least to begin. The beginning of a long haul.

On a lighter note, we set our base camp on a hill where the view is spectacular. Reminds me of the Grand Canyon, extremely mountainous and dry.

January 16

Another day and so much learned. We are still assessing the feeding center dynamics and finding a lot of chaos. There are 14 countys that come to the center for weekly dry rations as well as supplementary feedings if their child is within standards—below 85 percent (height and weight) and intensive (daily) below 65 percent. But what do you do with the child who is a bag of bones and the family travels seven to 12 miles just to get to the center? You can't make them travel that far each day yet we don't have the means to transport them nor do we have enough food to provide. I'm finding a lot of Catch 22 situations and some are tortuous decisions. It's difficult to assess the needs when you don't have the means to provide. Again, there is a lot of guess work. For example, a four year-old girl came yesterday, nutrition-wise stable, but very sick. We've thought of everything (within our powers) and yet she'll probably die tonight. What can you do?

Each county or section come on certain days. The children are weighed (hopefully gaining—many are), given a meal and then pick up their weekly dry ration as well as quickly medically assessed. There is never enough grain, and so people take much less than they need. There are 15 helpers paid by RRC, or work for food. These Ethiopian people are excellent and try so hard. Having these counterparts will make our job 100 times easier.

Today they all came up to our camp and we formally introduced ourselves, letting them know that we respect them as they do us. Working together is so important since our work would be useless if we never spent time to train their own people. One thousand people a day is quite a load.

January 17

Today was probably the most frustrating of all because of the three groups (different settlements), the largest is the Afars or nomads who live off their animals. Since the two year drought most animals have died leaving the people with little to survive. So obviously these people are quite destitute. Part of our job is to put all the new people in one area and give tickets to those who should be admitted to the supplemental feeding. What a pathetic feeling to have to choose essentially who is to live and who is to die! Luckily the majority of the groups looks fair and maybe 20 or 30 children are chosen a day. The center handles close to 5000 children weekly. We are in the midst of reorganization now that there are four of us. We are finding our own priorities to define and again frustration sets in. I look at things as a whole; meaning the feeding center is interrelated with grain and clinic work. Essentially we have no control over grain distribution and the clinic workers (RRC) but may be incorporated so that the individual child gets utmost care. Some of the nurses feel differently in that we should concentrate all our efforts reorganizing the center first and then deal with the clinic and grains. When you deal with masses, the plan must be well defined to all, especially when it comes to life and death situations.

January 19

It's now 6:30 a.m. and already its beginning to warm up from the cold chill of the night. 90-100 degrees during the day — it's dry so you don't feel it so much, but the stark difference of 35 degrees at night is hard to get used to.

Looking forward to tomorrow, our first day off and tonight when we'll meet the other international groups. Since we are allowed one to two cups of water to wash per day, one feels the need for a good soaking by the end of the week. Today, I'll get a pail of water, enough to wash my hair!

February 21

This is probably the most incredible experience in my life and I don't even know how to express my feelings regarding the devastation. At times one gets so frustrated it's hard to fathom, especially now because the fafa factory (porridge for the feeding center) has decided to remodel causing a marked decrease in production which only means less food. By the end of the week we'll run out, but my fingers are crossed that the Lutheran World Federation will back us until the factory is finished.

Since I've become team leader I spend a good portion of my time arranging meetings and coordinating the new feeding center. We've built eight buildings 80 feet by 100 feet, made out of USA white plastic (darker plastic would be confiscated by the government and used inappropriately) and Eucolyptus poles.

The drought continues to persist and each day the homeless, sick and famine stricken arrive praying for help. If the children qualify, meaning they must be below a certain percentage for standard height and weight, we enter them in the fafa program, receiving a wet ration or porridge and enough fafa to last until their next unit which is usually a week later unless of course they're extremely malnourished and then they come on a daily basis to our Intensive, and feed over 5000 a week in the supplementary. Soon the Intensive will be on a 24

by Richard Price, Attorney-at-Law

SETTLING OUT OF COURT

It almost always works to your advantage when your lawyer is authorized to settle your case out of court if possible. Often, because you and your neighbor may dislike each other, a disagreement can seem very serious. Frequently, the problem can be resolved by conversation between the opposing attorneys. Developing matrimonial crises can also often be smoothed over or resolved in a satisfactory fashion by lawyers for both parties. Once litigation has started, many opportunities will still arise when settlement out of court is possible and can be arranged. Your attorney should have permission to settle your suit if he can. More can often be gained by compromise than by pressing on to an uncertian, hoped-for complete victory.

If you have a legal question or think you may be faced with a legal problem, don't hesitate to consult with an attorney. Quite often, some sound legal advice is all that you need, or perhaps the intervention of an attorney can solve a problem before it has to go to court. In any case, a phone call to an attorney might put your mind at ease. LAW OFFICES OF RICHARD PRICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Rt. 3A, Cohasset, 383-9882. I am available daily by appointment.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

TEENAGE CARE

More and more teenagers and young adults are becoming involved in active sports. As a consequence, many get injured and require prompt chiropractic care. Over half the girls in our society develop scoliosis (curvature of the spine) during puberty. Left untreated over long periods of time, scoliosis tends to get worse. However, it can usually be corrected when chiropractic care is initiated in time. Needless to say, every teenage girl should be checked regularly for scoliosis. In fact, all teenagers and young adults should regularly visit their chiropractor to make sure that their newly active sports lives are not creating spinal problems that they will have to live with for the rest of their lives.

From the young to the "young at heart," a periodic chiropractic exam will deal with existing problems while also addressing developing situations. It is important for the active as well as the more sedentrary individual to seek such attention. Thus one's body funtion will be at its optimum and the possibility of achieving a total state of well-being will be more readily attained. For the attention you deserve, call the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12. Many insurance plans accepted as well as Workers Comp. cases. Tel. 383-1211, 1214. Cohasset reviews Votech budget

Although the pressure is on the administration of the South Shore Regional School District to reduce the proposed 1986 budget, local officials have nothing but praise for the Hanover-based high school.

While local school administrators tighten the reins on inflationary costs, the administration of the South Shore Vocational School presented a proposed budget last month that jumped a half-million dollars from the previous year. Although Cohasset's assessment to the regional school was reduced by seven percent from last year, every other town increased.

Several of the regional member towns have banned together in rejection of the proposed ficsal 1986 budget. Cohasset selectmen, who have twice reviewed the budget figures, have not voted on the proposal.

David Chittim, Cohasset's representative to the regional school district, said he will be going back to review an amended version of the proposed budget and will return to selectmen with "hopefully, reduced numbers" within two weeks.

Total operating costs for the regional school climbed from $2,618,447 this year, to a proposed $3,135,026 next year. Included in that substantial annual increase are jumps in salaries, equipment and text acquisitions and maintentance. As Chittim explained, the increase is based on the larger percentage of students who will attend the school next year.

And although he is sympathetic to the notion that regional administrators should be towing the fiscal line along with local school officials, he said unlike Cohasset's declining enrollment, votech's student body is increasing annually.

As he explained two weeks ago to selectmen, many of the texts used at the school are more than 30 years old. The equipment, much of which is borrowed or second-hand, is wearing out. Replacement of these items is a necessity, he told selectmen, not a luxury.

"First, there are more students. In fact, a substantial increase over last year," Chittim said, explaining some reasons for the potential increase. "Secondly, we are now feeling the effects of added programs at the school. There is also a substantial increase in the rent for our Abington campus. We have added a new bus. And, we were very far behind in our equipment needs, books and labs. Those are the lifeblood of a school and we just don't have the proper equipment."

Chittim was named Cohasset's representative to the regional school district about nine months ago. Since that time, he has become familiar with the people involved and the facility. Despite the gloomy budget outlook, Chittim is impressed with the school's administration and curriculum.

"I think it's an excellent school, offering a lot of opportunity. But it's in a growing phase now. The enrollment is increasing annually, while we are woefully short of equipment, books and supplies. We had hoped to make some in-roads this year. It will take five years to get some of these things adequately accomplished," he added.
